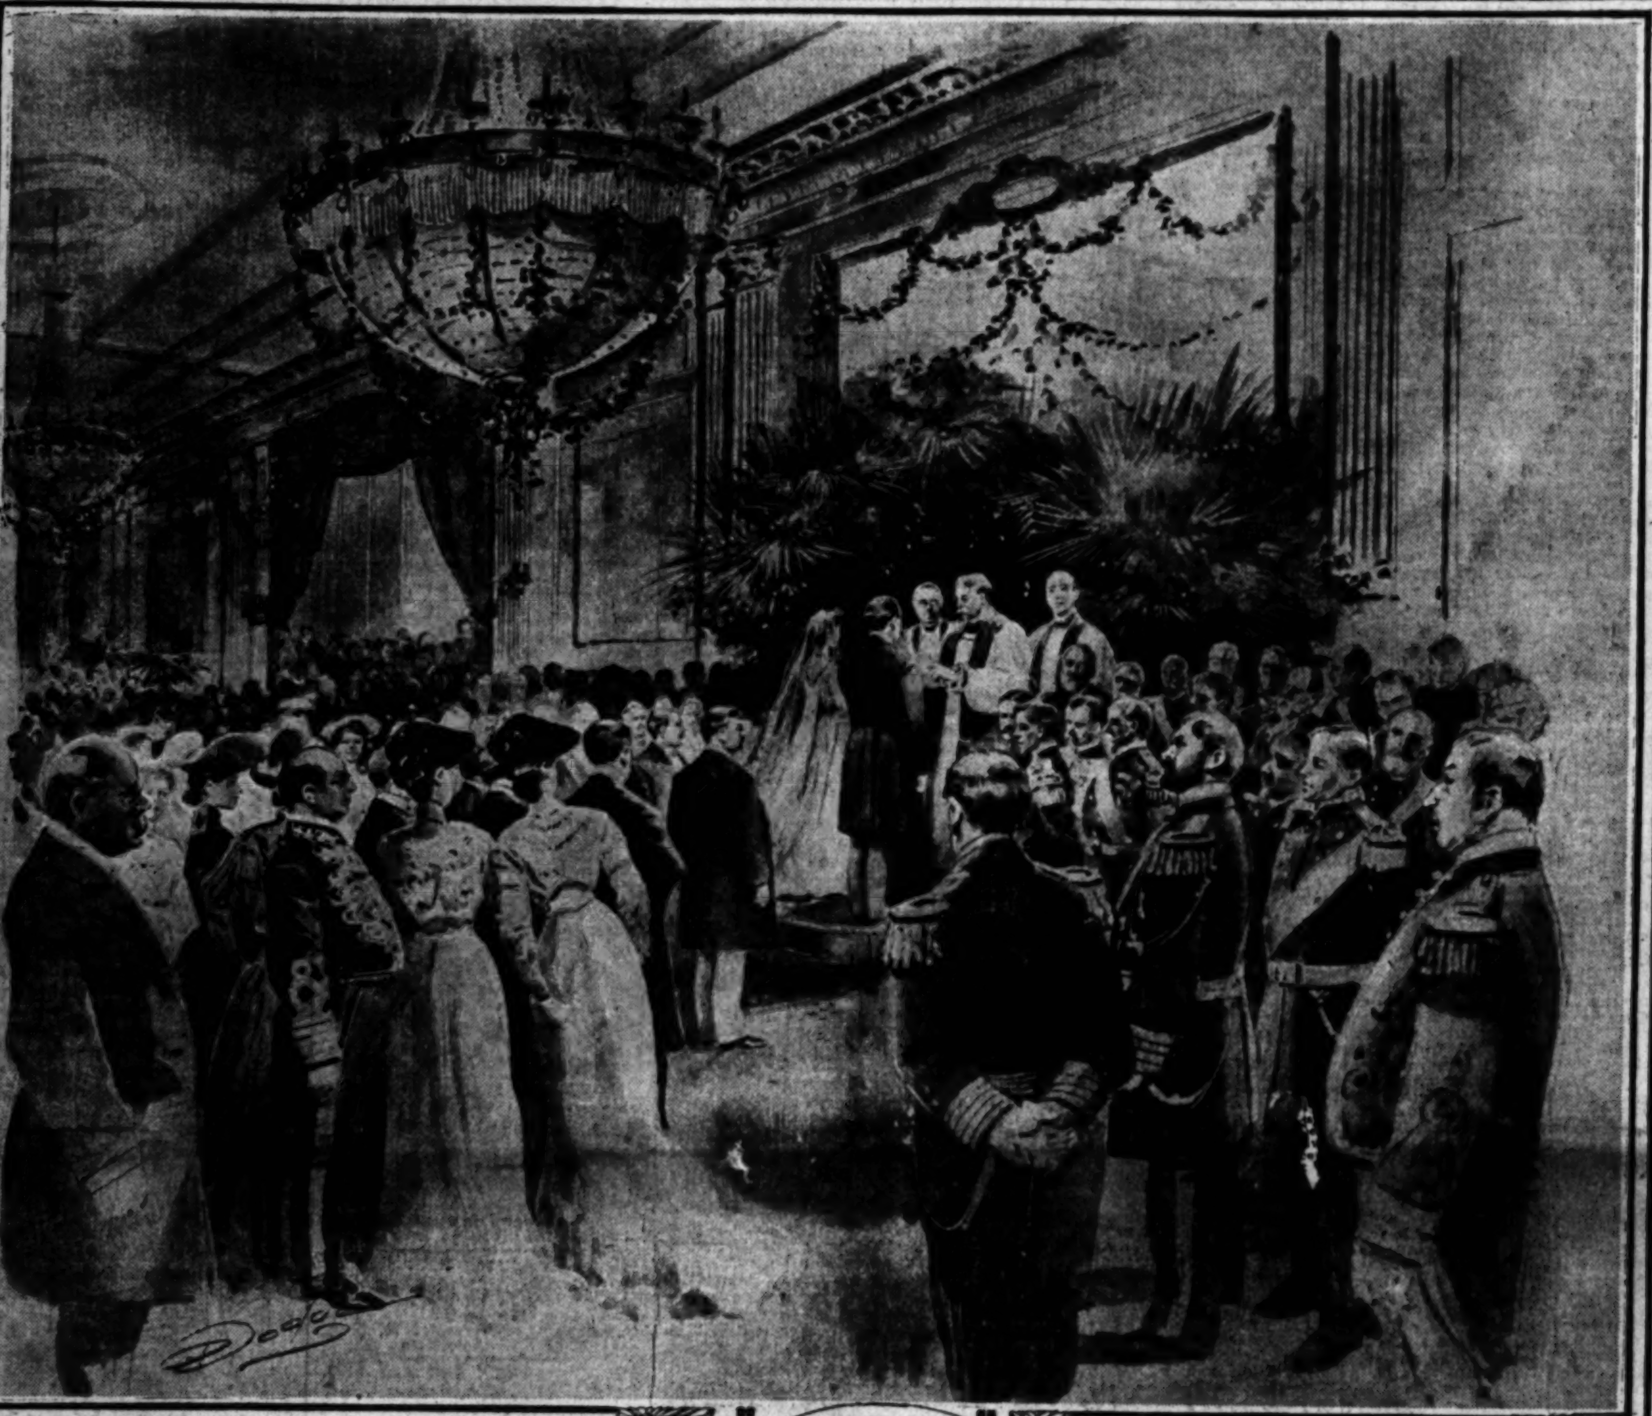
MOST BEAUTIFUL OF ALL STATE CEREMONIES, THE WEDDING OF THE PRESIDENT'S DAUGHTER.



LEAVE BY MOBE FOR COUNTRY HOME.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—Shortly after 4 o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Longworth left the White House by the south entrance, thereby avoiding a large and curious throng which had assembled in front of the mansion.

Alone, they entered a large automobile and were driven rapidly away. They went, it is understood, but not disclosed authoritatively, to the country home of John R. McLean, "Friendship," a few miles from the heart of Washington, on the Tennallytown road.

As the bridal couple entered the automobile they were showered with dainty slippers of rice thrown by the brothers and the sisters of the bride and by the younger members of the Roosevelt family connections who were present.

Mrs. Longworth was attended to the big touring car by Maj. Charles C. McCauley, a long-time friend and one of the social aides of President Roosevelt. Mr. Perkins, the bridegroom's best man, accompanied Mr. Longworth to the car.

Standing on the south portico of the White House, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, Admiral and Mrs. Cowles and other members of the family bade the bridal couple God-speed and waved handkerchiefs to them until they were out of sight.

Just as the automobile drew away from the White House, an old shoe thrown by one of the ushers at the wedding alighted on the top of the machine and it remained there as long as the car was in sight.

It soon became noised about that the bride and bridegroom had left the executive mansion but not until that fact became known definitely did the throng about the White House grounds disperse.

The brilliant spectacle at the marriage of Alice Roosevelt and Nicholas Longworth. Bishop Satterlee tying the knot. The bride and groom.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The greatest event in the history of the White House is over, and Miss Roosevelt, daughter of the President, has become the wife of Representative Nicholas Longworth of Ohio. One thousand guests were witnesses of the ceremony, and the vows exchanged at an improvised altar in the East Room of the mansion will go down in history as one of the most brilliant, most beautiful ever known. While it was an affair distinctly of state, it was delightfully informal in atmosphere.

Guests began arriving at 11 o'clock. They came slowly and easily, and there was no semblance of crowded stairway or halls. The entire house in every room and corner was redolent of the perfume of lilies and carnations. The White House has not been seen in many years with such quantities of decorations. They were beautiful in that they were not too profuse nor too scant.

Among the first to arrive and go directly to the East Room were Justice and Mrs. Harlan. They were closely followed by Secretary of State and Mrs. Root. Another early arrival was two most interesting widows, Mrs. Nelly Grant Sartoris, the last bride of the East Room, and Mrs. Hobart, widow of the Vice-President in McKinley's administration. They came together and passed in among the guests at the left side of the platform of the East Room, looking from the platform. After 11:30 o'clock, guests came faster, and were soon taking their places very rapidly.

MRS. MACVEAGH FAINTS.

The only incident to create any concern was the fainting of Mrs. Wayne MacVeagh, wife of the former Minister to Italy. She had been in the East Room but a short time, when she became ill from the closeness of the atmosphere, and the great assemblage toward the ribbons which marked the aisle. She was carried out of the room by Col. Bromwell through the main corridor and the state dining-room into the Blue Room, where she was placed upon a sofa, when the doors were closed. It was but a short time before she was revived, and before the ceremony was over she had entirely recovered.

The Marine Band orchestra played from 11 to 12.

Mrs. Roosevelt, escorted by Col. Bromwell, descended the stair near the East Room and entered, taking her position on the left side of the platform behind the ribbons. Behind her were Miss Ethel and Master Quentin and Archibald Roosevelt. Only three minutes after she took her place, the Bishop of Washington entered the East Room by the same route and took his place on the platform, kneeled and said silent prayer.

Scarcely had the Bishop finished when the band struck up "Salute to Colors," which always announces the coming of the President. The doors into the state dining-room at the opposite end of the main corridor from the East Room were thrown wide open and the bride was disclosed, leaning on the arm of her father. Simultaneously, Mr. Longworth appeared at the foot of a small stairs near the East Room, and the ushers, who were standing just in front of the bride and her father, started the wedding march to the altar, the Marine Band playing the opening bars of the wedding march from "Tannhauser."

MORE BEAUTIFUL THAN EVER.

Expectation, which had screwed to the highest pitch, was at last gratified, the White House bride was more beautiful and more gracious than she had ever appeared before. She was a fair picture to look upon. She and her father smiled and bowed to their acquaintances as they passed along corridor, neither appearing to have any nervousness.

The bride wore a gown of ideal beauty. It was a Princesse robe of white satin of the plainest and richest quality which American factories can turn out. The front panel was outlined with satin cord. From her shoulders fell a long, rich court train of heaviest brocaded satin in a lily pattern, its silvery shimmers gleaming in the bright sunlight which flooded the mansion. No artificial lights were used. The gown was made with a low, round neck, which was outlined in orange blossoms, and a yoke of narrow depth showed above it. The sleeves were elbow length and made of ruffles of rare old rose point lace which adorned her mother's wedding gown and matched that of the yoke. A large bow of white satin ribbons finished the sleeve on the front side of the arm. Her veil was of tulle and entirely enveloped her graceful figure. It was worn off the face and formed a sort of small turban on her head. This was outlined with orange blossoms. Her hair was worn low, in the Alice Roosevelt style, and a gold comb finished her coiffure. About her throat was the diamond dog collar given her on Christmas by her father, and below this the string of large and pure diamonds given her for her wedding present by Mr. Longworth. Her only corsage ornament was a sunbrust of diamonds four inches in diameter, with a huge sapphire in the center. She wore long white gloves, the third finger of the left hand being cut to permit Mr. Longworth to place the ring upon it. Her bouquet was white orchids, made in English-bride style. They were a huge bunch of flowers in her right arm and they hung almost to the hem of her skirt, making a sort of cascade of flowers. Her train lay four yards upon the floor and was square-cut with ruchings of plain satin around it.

Partial Agreement at Algeciras.

England to Organize Large International Bank for Morocco.

France Will Accept Spanish Collaboration in Policing the Territory.

America Figures in Successful Efforts to Break Dangerous Deadlock.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ALGECIRAS, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It was announced today that the bank question has been practically settled, England agreeing to organize a large international bank, as Germany wishes.

France will accept Spanish collaboration in policing and Germany is likely to accept this, though she would prefer a police entirely organized by the Maghzen, which the powers think impracticable.

Fears of the conferences ending in a disagreement have quite disappeared. Mr. White has contributed largely to what appears to be a settlement.

The French reply to the German observations on the police question was delivered late last evening. Just how far the agreement goes is not known, but there is the highest authority for saying that there is identity of opinion on one important point—namely, as to the manner in which the officers shall be chosen and appointed.

Meanwhile, the financial question is a subject of conversation between Count Von Tattenbach and M. Regnault, who are already in agreement on many points.

A final understanding will, it is said, be easy if the points of difference on the police question can be settled.

ONLY TEN LINES.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—...]

ALGECIRAS (Spain) ... important step forward has been made in the Franco-German controversy over the question of the control of the Moroccan police.

Last night M. Revoil, the ranking French delegate, sought Herr Von Radowitz, the German envoy, and delivered to him a written response to the proposition the Germans had previously submitted.

Secrecy is maintained upon the contents of the Franch document, but it is known to be a serious effort toward conciliation.

Henry White, the head of the American delegation, said, in an interview: "The communications that passed between France and Germany were in no sense proposals or even notes. They were aides memoiré; giving with precision the points of view of the two countries, but may undoubtedly be considered an important step forward."

It is understood that the French reply contained only ten lines and was without heading or signature. Although little of a concrete character has resulted from this exchange of views, there is good reason to believe it has made possible a compromise and that this is already taking shape along lines which Mr. White is understood to have suggested.

It was on Mr. White's proposal that the conference today exempted merchant training ships not engaged in trade from the formalities imposed by the new customs regulations.

LONDON IN THE DARK.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LONDON, Feb. 17.—The British government had not been advised late this evening of the nature of the French reply to the German note on the Moroccan question handed to the German representatives at Algeciras today. The Foreign Office does not expect France to make any concessions to her first demands respecting control of the police.

At any rate, Great Britain has not been notified that France will modify her case, which, in view of the close relations between the two countries, would seem to be the probable course had a modification been contemplated.

Discussing the question this afternoon, an official said he did not believe France had made any compromise in regard to the policing of Morocco, but she might agree to international control of the State bank of Morocco, France and Germany, having two representatives, and Great Britain having one on the administrative council of the future bank. This would be contingent on Germany agreeing to French control of the police.

Great Britain apparently is somewhat in the dark as to what is passing between France and Germany at Algeciras and fears are expressed in certain quarters that the Germans are endeavoring to interfere with the friendly relations between the two powers.

The British government is insistent that they are desirous of an amicable settlement, but it cannot go behind the agreement entered into with France to support her demands.

REGRET MISREPRESENTATION.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is regretted here that the French press continues to misrepresent every incident of the negotiations regarding Morocco. The Temps and the Independance Belge version of the conversation of M. Rovier and Prince Rodolin are imaginary in substance, and misleading in regard to their comment. The interview was of a most friendly character; M. Rovier did not make the remark that Algeciras was the place to discuss Morocco.

German diplomatists are well aware of such a patent fact; still, it does not preclude the German Ambassador in Paris keeping the French confidentially informed of Germany's position, in the same way as Ambassadors in London, Rome, Madrid and Washington are expected to act toward the government to which they are accredited.

JURY DECLARES PRICE GUILTY.

LOS ANGELES REAL ESTATE MAN IN A BAD FIX.

After a Trial Lasting Four Days Defendant is Convicted of Seduction—Is Well-known Man in the South and Was Arrested but Few Hours Prior to His Marriage.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MARYSVILLE, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] After a trial covering four days, J. B. Price, a young Los Angeles real estate dealer and life-insurance agent, was convicted by a Sutter-county jury this afternoon of seducing Miss Viola Dashiell of Marysville at Pleasant Grove last April. They had driven to that town and stayed there over night, occupying the same room in a private house, the family living there supposing them to be man and wife. The trial all through was replete with evidence in which the relations of Price with his accuser and of the latter with other men prior to last April was told. Although several character witnesses were put on by the defense to testify as to the bad character of Miss Dashiell, no actual unchastity was proved.

Attorneys Lecompte Davis and Jud R. Rush of Los Angeles, A. C. McLaughlin of Yuba City and W. S. Johnson of Marysville made a particularly strong fight for Price and were aided by S. C. Price, father of the convicted young man, who is a criminal lawyer and is prominently mentioned for Governor of Missouri.

The arrest of Price was made in Los Angeles in November a few hours before his wedding to Miss Black, a favorite in social circles, and sister of Black Bros., real estate dealers. The brothers gave $10,000 as a wedding gift and took Price into the firm.

The jury was out four hours and on the first ballot stood only seven for conviction, but the others were finally won over. Sentence will be pronounced by Judge Mahon next Saturday, but steps will be taken to obtain a new trial on appeal.

Price was allowed his freedom on $2000 bail, put up before the trial.

GERMANY AVOIDS TARIFF WAR.

Will Not Take Initiative With the United States, but May Retaliate.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In reply to various comments made on German action in regard to the American commercial treaty, it is stated that the German policy was not based upon any illusions regarding the realities of the situation. These critics are wrong if they imagine that a stiff-necked attitude would have produced positive results. One consideration is carefully avoided; that is if America insists upon a tariff war, it will come, and would, indeed, occur now if Germany had not taken steps to postpone it, on the principle that if it is inevitable, it would better be later than sooner.

Germany declines to accept the responsibility for such a calamity as long as she has not exhausted every means to prevent it.

Nobody believes here that President Roosevelt favors any but a national standpoint, but the opinion is prevalent that the President, among many other distinguished Americans, is honestly convinced that a tariff war would not benefit America politically or economically.

BETTER GOVERNMENT SOUGHT.

Santo Domingo Official Wants Civil Affairs Separated from the Military.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTO DOMINGO, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Señor Leonte Vasquez, minister of public works and a justice, plans an absolute reorganization of the government of the republic.

"Our constitution is bad," he said, "and the measures already taken to bring about a change make proper provisions for the separation of the civil government from the military. This was never observed, and the military chiefs were left in control of civil affairs. I propose relegating them to the charge of forts and barracks and establishing a real civil government.

"My brother, Horatio, and my cousin, Ramon Caceres, who is always like a brother to me, have indorsed this proposition. We wish to do away with dictatorship and autocratic powers. Caceres, who does not claim great culture, has the highest ideals for the public benefit and is easily swayed in the right direction."

SHOULD GET M'CURDY.

Supreme Court Justice Advises That Suit be Brought Against Him Before He Skips.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] E. C. Truesdale, chairman of the so-called "House Cleaning" committee of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, has received a letter from Rufus H. Peckham, justice of the United States Supreme Court, in which the writer's views as to the bringing of suit against Richard A. McCurdy, the company's former president and others of the officers and trustees are set forth in vigorous language.

Justice Peckham advises Mr. Truesdale as chairman of the investigation committee, that it is the duty of that body to bring suits, without delay, against Mr. McCurdy and all others concerned, in order to recover contributions to political campaign funds, as well as certain exorbitant commissions and salaries paid to various persons under the McCurdy regime.

CHINA IS NOT MAKING WAR.

Sir Chen Chang Says Agitation is Merely Internal.

Believes Emperor Will Put Down Any Trouble.

Army Has Been Preparing for Six Years.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—"There is no danger of an uprising in China against foreigners," said Sir Chen Tung Liang Chang, the Chinese Minister. "It is true, of course, that there is political agitation in China, but its object is to create such excitement as to cause internal complications with the view of crippling, if not wholly destroying, the present dynasty," says the Post today.

"My government is amply prepared to meet any emergency. I do not mean that China is threatened with a revolution, but that a small party of discontents is striving desperately to start one. But the movement will not be strong, or dangerous. My government is keeping me minutely informed.

"If, as a result of the agitation now going on a worthy foreigner is harmed, the Emperor's soldiers will pounce upon the community that harbors the miscreants and lay it waste, should they be unable to find any one of the scoundrels responsible, directly or indirectly, for the trouble. The slaughter will be sickening if the government is driven to reprisals. Yu An Shi Ko, the great Viceroy of Chi-li, set the example for this sort of rigid work in the Boxer uprising of 1900. The slaughter of the Chinese by the Emperor's soldiers will be more horrible than that of Yu An Shi's soldiers six years ago if the discontents now at work to involve China in foreign troubles do not desist.

ARMY IS PREPARED.

"Millions of dollars have been expended by the central government in the last six years in bringing the army up to a proper condition of efficiency. China does not want to go to war. We are a peaceable people. War is hateful—awful—horrible—hell."

"Is there likelihood of a foreign war?"

"None, so long as the outside world lets China manage her own affairs."

"Is it a fact that Germany or Germans are mainly responsible for a large part of the threatening trouble in China at present?"

"The Germans are aggressive," he replied. "Since the dawn of your civilization the Germans have been the disturbers of the peace and repose of other peoples and nations within what is now the Christian domain. They seem always discontented with what they have. Their energy appears to demand the whole world in which to bustle. I do not say that they are responsible in any sense for what is going on behind the scenes in China. I merely tell you what I have heard stated in well-informed and responsible quarters.

FOREIGNERS SAFE.

"I am keeping my government informed of all I know and all I hear. I have pleaded with the authorities at Peking to be careful to see to it that foreigners of all classes are treated unusually well in China while this agitation lasts. I have learned that my advice is being followed all over China.

"The Chinese have adopted a new internal policy. There will be no more concessions to foreigners.

"The granting of concessions has been a too-frequent source of trouble to be continued. So we shall attend to our own affairs in the future and we hope the outside world—the Christian world—will permit us to do this. When I reflect that all Christendom is an armed camp, I am convinced that we are more peaceably and neighborly inclined than is the Christian world. I suspect that statistics would show that there are today more men in uniform and with deadly weapons in their hands than at any other period in the world's history. Even China is armed to protect itself."

"Why is the government of the United States strengthening its military forces in the Orient?"

"That is something I do not understand," replied Sir Chen Tung.

CHINESE PAPER TELLS TALE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BERKELEY, Feb. 17.—Prof. John Fryer, head of the department of oriental languages, of the State University announces that in perusing a copy of a Chinese newspaper which had just come to him he learned startling news of the preparations the Emperor is making for the conflict believed to be impending. He informed the university students that this paper states that the Chinese government has ordered a million small arms and one hundred cannon from manufacturers in Germany, in preparation for the threatened war with foreign powers.

Professor Fryer spent thirty years in China. He is intimately acquainted with Chinese officials of high rank and himself holds the rank of mandarin of the third class, conferred by the Chinese government. He has been decorated with the Order of the Dragon, the highest honor for a foreigner from the Chinese government.

The present trouble in China, according to Prof. Fryer, is undoubtedly the most serious that the nations have had to deal with since relations with the Chinese kingdom were established. Discussing conditions and the prospects of war in the Orient Prof. Fryer says:

CHINA TO STRIKE BACK.

"The present unrest in China is to be regarded as the cumulative wrath of the Chinese against all western powers. The uprising that is threatened is not a local matter to be put down by a handful of marines and a cruiser or two. It is an expression of Chinese national feeling, an assertion of Chinese regard for the nation's dignity, affronted as it has been many times by the powers during the last decade. The boycott may be regarded as but incidental to the larger movement of general antipathy against all foreigners.

"Yuan Shi Kai, Viceroy of Chili province, the power behind the throne, and the commander of the best army in China, is really the master of the situation, and he is, perhaps, the one man who can stem the tide of the revolution that seems to be coming. What his attitude is, I do not know. It will have much to do with determining the trend that events will take in China."

COMMISSION EN ROUTE.

Close on the heels of the Chinese commission that passed through San Francisco a few weeks ago comes another appointed by the Empress Dowager to study governmental questions and political economy as practiced in the United States and Europe. The party is coming across the Pacific on the liner Dakota, which is due in Seattle on the 26th inst., and preparations are now being made by the Chinese Consul at Seattle, and the Chinese merchants, to show the distinguished visitors proper courtesy upon their arrival. A Duke and two Princes of the Royal family head the party and they are accompanied by twenty-seven attaches, making thirty in all.

MISSIONARIES MEET.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—Representatives of the eight foreign missionary boards having missions in China, and several of the foreign workers who are now in this country held a conference yesterday in the rooms of the Presbyterian Board in Fifth avenue, to consider the conditions now affecting missionary effort and the outlook in that field.

The conference discussed the recent anti-foreign riots and gave out the following statement:

"While recognizing the gravity of the present situation and the possibility of serious trouble, we wish to express the conviction that there is not, as yet, extreme reason for apprehension. Communications received from many sections of China, as a rule, indicate quiet conditions. An outbreak of the nature of the Boxer uprising under sanction of the government is believed to be quite improbable. Local disturbances are possible at all times, and it cannot be denied that anti-foreign sentiment and anti-American feeling in particular, are extending in some sections. The missionaries have been charged to exercise all prudence, and it is confidently believed that, extraordinary circumstances excepted, they can secure protection should danger arise."

LIVES NOT IMPERILED.

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—The following cablegram from China was received today by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions:

"Missionaries not in peril; everything is encouraging."

This message came from the mission station at Shanghai and was a reply to a cable inquiry made by the board yesterday for information as to whether its missionaries were in peril.

DOG SAVES WOMAN.

Nero, a bulldog and pet of Mrs. John H. Brown, 1221 Wilton avenue, this afternoon saved its mistress from an assault and probable murder when he sprang at the throat of a desperate man, who, under the guise of a peddler, had entered her home. Rapidly choking her into submission, the thug had thrown Mrs. Brown on the floor when the dog dashed at him. Nero only gave up the chase when the fleeing man scaled a fence half a block away.

New York House Throws Out Guests Who Did Not Appear There in Full Evening Dress.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Undemocratic and rude," were terms applied today to the policy of the management of the Waldorf-Astoria in not permitting two New York men to dine in one of the palm rooms because they were not in evening dress.

It is one of the ironies of the situation that the two gentlemen concerned, H. DeCourcey Forbes and Frederick O. Beach, are distinguished for their observance of the proprieties of life. They indignantly left the hotel when their attention was called by the head waiter to the new rule of the establishment. From all points of view the incident was widely discussed today, and few upheld the position taken by the proprietor of the Waldorf-Astoria. It was found that in other fashionable restaurants no such regulation existed, and that the sentiment of those who conducted them was adverse to its principle.

It was held from a legal point of view that there is no justification for such a rule. It is likely that the matter will be tested in the courts, for the two gentlemen concerned are contemplating bringing suit against the hotel management.

SACRAMENTO, Feb. 17.—A good-roads convention was held in this city this afternoon under the direction of the Sacramento Valley Development Association. Nathaniel Ellery, State Highway Commissioner, read a paper on the "Commercial Value of Good Roads," which was followed by a general discussion. Delegates, many of them members of boards of supervisors from the several counties in the Sacramento Valley, were in attendance.

Thomas McConnell offered a resolution petitioning the Legislature to pass laws to require the State Board of Prison Directors to employ at least 20 convicts in quarrying rock at Folsom Prison and preparing it for constructing bridges, the material to be sold at a reasonable price in this and neighboring counties. No action was taken on the resolution.

TICKET BROKER'S CHARGE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 17.—An affidavit by A. Ottinger, a railroad ticket broker, was filed in Judge Murasky's court today in connection with a motion to dissolve an injunction obtained by the Southern Pacific and other companies prohibiting the brokers in this city from dealing in certain special rate tickets. In behalf of the companies, it was claimed that these round-trip tickets were sold in the East at figures far below regular rates, and that the reduction induced easterners to come to California.

Ottinger, in his affidavit, said that the railroad companies by combining to issue what were called special excursion tickets were, in effect stifling competition and that they were thus violating the Interstate Commerce law and the Congressional act of 1890 against trusts and monopolies, and that the companies do not enter court "with clean hands," in his opinion.

MAY PROTEST KING'S ACT.

HUNGARIAN DEPUTIES CLAIM BLOODSHED MIGHT RESULT.

Meeting of Coalition Party Will Be Held Tomorrow to Decide on How Best to Move When Crown Declares Parliament Dissolved—There May Be No Ratification of New Treaties.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BUDAPEST, Feb. 17.—The possible consequences of the dissolution of the Hungarian Parliament by the crown, which is set for next Monday, serve to arouse certain feelings of fear both here and at Vienna, for an act in the constitutional drama which will then be played in the Hungarian capital may bring violence and bloodshed. If the members of Parliament refuse to obey the royal rescript dissolving the body, the only recourse left to the crown will be to clear the house by force of arms.

It is not yet known in what manner the various parties composing the coalition will accept the dissolution. Some reports are to the effect that they will lodge a united protest against it and other component parties will be allowed to act in this respect as it may deem best. A final meeting to decide what attitude the coalition will adopt will be held tomorrow.

A basis for the possible refusal of deputies to dissolve, it is said, is the contention that the King-Emperor's act is unconstitutional, but upon this point there is much divergence of opinion, even among the Hungarian opposition leaders.

Gen. Nyeri, who was appointed the King's commissioner to read the rescript dissolving Parliament, is the most interesting figure in the events scheduled for Monday. He represents the King and has been lodged in the royal palace at Budapest. He is a Hungarian by birth and is the youngest general in the army. Gen. Nyeri was a member of the chamber of deputies until a few months ago, and is familiar wit hthe workings of that body. He was formerly minister for national defense in the Cabinet of Count Tisza.

The members of the present chamber of deputies were elected a year ago, but owing to continued conflict between the crown and the Parliamentary organization since then, the chamber has been practically without functions of any kind.

The King can call new elections within ninety days from the date of dissolving Parliament and many believe that this will be done. The object of the crown in calling new elections will be to weaken or break the power of the present coalition. These elections could not be held under the proposed broader suffrage rights for Hungary.

The house of magnates will be dissolved simultaneously with the chamber of deputies.

The commercial treaties with Austria, Russia, Germany, Italy and other countries must be ratified before March 1, and there being no Parliament this will be done by the Hungarian ministry.

SAYS DEVIL WINS.

Toledo Preachers Admit Evangelistic Campaign Has Proved a Failure.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TOLEDO, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] After an evangelistic campaign lasting for weeks, the ministers of this city, in a conference today, confessed that the devil had them beaten, and the city was evidently too wicked to be saved.

Pastor after pastor arose, and made a pessimistic report until finally the Rev. C. H. Barker of the United Brethren Church summed up the feeling of despair in these words:

"Brethren, let us frankly confess we are not reaching the unsaved of this city. Of course, a few sinners have come out to our meetings, but it was a pitiably small percentage. In my opinion, we have failed. The devil has proven stronger than the servants of God. We have not reached the unsaved in any adequate sense."

BALLOONISTS SOAR AND EAT.

Record of Berlin Aeronauts Shows Meals Were Devoured With Great Frequency.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A Berlin correspondent tells of an interesting balloon trip made by Herr Lenkeit, accompanied by several army officers. Prince Joach Albrecht was present at the start.

A log which was kept by the aeronaut would go to show that ballooning, in addition to any services it may render to science, is excellent for the appetite. In fact, the only remarks in the log, record the prowess of the balloonists as trenchermen.

Ten o'clock, the first breakfast, consisting of eight hard boiled eggs, four buttered rolls, wine and mineral water. Twelve o'clock, the second big breakfast, including cutlets, bread and butter, champagne, mineral waters and red wine. At half past four p.m., Brunswick sausages, with red and white wine.

These copious meals evidently, however, only acted as an appetizer as the passengers record that on reaching Berlin "We dined at the Monopol restaurant."

ANOTHER KNOWLEDGE CONTEST.

"The Times" Offers Twenty-one Cash Prizes to Successful Contestants. To Be Conducted on the Same Lines as Last Year's Successful Contest.

The Times takes pleasure in announcing another Knowledge Contest to be conducted on the same lines as the one run last September. Doubtless the thousands of Times' readers who sent in answers then will be eager for another try for the prizes.

The contest will be conducted in this manner: The Times will publish a number of questions, the answer to each being the name of some merchant or the name of some article closely identified with his store. By study and questioning readers will be able to give the required name. These are to be sent to the office of The Times, addressed to "the Knowledge Editor."

There are to be no restrictions as to the number of lists sent. Some discovered last time after sending in their first list that they had erred in one or two cases, and at once sent in another list. These are numbered as soon as received in the office and at the proper time gone over for the purpose of selecting the winners.

The only persons barred from the contest are employés of The Times. All others may compete. If no wholly correct replies are received the prizes will be awarded to those who send the nearest correct replies.

GAMBLING WITH DEATH.

What Many of Us Are Doing Three Times a Day.

For everything we get, something is taken away. Every act pulls two ways. Some men in power dole out their souls for it. They can't have soul and power at the same time.

And so, in this quick-living age, most of us can't have energy and health at the same time. One or the other must be lost, and it is usually health.

We know we are doing wrong and would like to reform, but we have a morbid fear of being laughed at if we aim to live and eat according to conscience and good sense.

Some of us break away for awhile and enslave ourselves to a diet. We read about the hardy Scotsman being fed on porridge and oatcake, making soldiers of muscle and dash, and how Caesar's army was fed on corn. But the diet doesn't last long. We quickly swing back into the great line, eating and drinking to fulness like the rest, eating anything and everything, at any time, and any way we find it. We say "what is a stomach for if it isn't to obey the palate."

But there is really no one rule applicable to everybody's stomach. What one man may eat, another may not.

But the dyspeptic should remember that the death list has a dark shadow hovering over it with a long bony finger pointing to "died of heart disease." Physicians will tell us that there are few cases of heart disease that do not come from a stomach derangement.

At every meal we may be brewing for ourselves a terrible case of dyspepsia. It may come upon us after breakfast tomorrow morning or after that oyster supper tomorrow night.

Acute indigestion means that you have even chances for death or life. That's the gamble you are taking. That precious gastric juice decides, as a rule, whether you continue to live or not.

Therefore, if you feel your food lies like a "lump of lead" on your stomach, beware! Your gastric juice is weak. It can't dispose of the food in time to prevent fermentation. Take something that will do it effectively, and at once. Take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, the most powerful tablets in the world for the relief of all kinds of stomach trouble, nausea, indigestion, the worst cases of dyspepsia, fermentation, bloaty feeling, sourness, heartburn and brash.

One grain of an ingredient of these tablets will digest 3000 grains of food. Your stomach needs a rest at once. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will relieve your stomach of more than two-thirds of the work it has to do, digesting perfectly whatever food there is in your stomach.

You can't do your work well, or be cheerful, or have energy or vim or ambition, when your stomach is bad. Make yourself feel good after a hearty meal, feel good all over, clear your mind and make you enjoy life, by taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Give your stomach a rest, so it can right itself, then you need fear nothing. You can get these tablets anywhere for 50 cents a package.

WILL JOIN TO PROTECT SEALS.

ENGLAND AND AMERICA TO TAKE UP MOOTED QUESTION.

When the Newfoundland Fisheries Matter is Settled Pressure Will Be Brought to Have the Two Countries Bar Pelagic Sealing in All the Rookeries.

LONDON, Feb. 17.—Upon the conclusion of the diplomatic exchanges between Great Britain and America with respect to the Newfoundland fisheries case, which are proceeding slowly, it is probable the negotiations will be opened looking to a more satisfactory settlement of the Pacific sealing question. Some months ago the subject was brought up, but it was agreed no immediate hurry was necessary and it was decided to forego the discussion until after the settlement of the present question of the Newfoundland fisheries. When the seals again become the subject of formal negotiations, Japan will be one of the parties, and Russia also probably will participate.

Japan, it is understood, would look with favor upon an international law preventing pelagic sealing as she, like America, has islands on which she can take her pick from herds, killing the old bulls and leaving the females and young undisturbed, thus stopping the extermination which America contends must result from pelagic sealing.

As on previous occasions, the Canadian pelagic sealers will be the chief obstacle to a settlement, but the diplomats hope for a solution. It will again be suggested that America purchase the Canadian sealing schooners besides paying their owners compensation. But another proposal is that the Canadians should be given a share of the rookeries owned by America and Japan.

In regard to Newfoundland, the American and British governments are exchanging notes respecting the rights to which American fishermen are entitled under the act of 1818.

Great Britain is believed to have satisfied America as to the charges that the Gloucester fishermen were the victims of illegal acts on the part of the Newfoundlanders, who, it was claimed, cut American nets. Any new treaty or new arrangement affecting American fishermen in Newfoundland waters will be arranged with Washington by Secretary Root and Ambassador Durand.

John B. Wattles.

HEALDSBURG, Feb. 17.—John B. Wattles, at one time a prominent San Francisco stock broker and clubman, died at his home below Healdsburg this morning, after a prolonged illness. He was one of Sonoma county's prominent property owners and fruit growers, having resided in the city for the past twelve years.

FRICKS WIN SUIT.

GREENBURG (Pa.) Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Harry K. Thaw today lost his legal fight against Henry C. Frick and his half-brother, Benjamin, and A. Blair Thaw. The suit was to prevent the transfer of coal properties from the Thaw estate to the Frick estate. Harry's brothers, who were trustees of the estate, held that the proposed transfer would be beneficial to the estate. Harry, as an heir, maintained it would be injurious, and accused Frick and his brothers of misrepresentation and double dealing. Judge Steele ruled against the plaintiff, but placed the trustees under $500,000 bonds. One thousand acres of valuable coal lands are involved.

GREAT CONDUIT FAULTY.

Expert Engineers Find Philadelphia Filtration Plant Defective and Leaky.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 17.—That the great conduit which is an important part of the Torresdale filtration plant is a defective piece of work, and was not constructed in accordance with the specifications, is the judgment of the three engineers who for months have been investigating the work done by the contracting firm of J. P. McNichol and Company.

A report embodying their views of the tunnel was today submitted to Mayor Weaver. The expert finds that the conduit leaks at the average rate of 1,500,000 gallons a day.

J. P. McNichol, the ostensible constructor for the conduit, received in all for the work $1,321,223. The membership of the firm which built the conduit included State Senator J. P. McNichol and Israel W. Durham, the former leader of the Republican organization in this city.

Longworth's Washington residence - Miss Roosevelt's future home

Last Room, where Mrs Longworth was married

MISS ROOSEVELT WEDS.

ritual of the Episcopal Church, with the word "obey" in it, which the bride repeated after him in clear tones, although faint. Mr. Longworth's portion of the service was pronounced in firm, clear voice, distinctly heard by all.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, Mrs. Roosevelt stepped upon the platform as soon as the Bishop had congratulated the distinguished pair. She greeted Mrs. Longworth most affectionately, kissing her several times on each cheek, with her arms about her. The President greeted his daughter the same way, and both he and Mrs. Roosevelt shook the hand of their son-in-law impressively. It was all smiles and happiness and no tears were shed. Mrs. Roosevelt and her step-daughter talked laughingly to each other during the few seconds they were embracing. Following them, were the bridegroom's mother and sister, who did quite the same thing, except that they kissed the bridegroom as well as the bride, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt meanwhile passing through the corridor to the Blue Room where they stood and received the guests as they passed through the same way and entered the state dining-room for the buffet breakfast.

The bride and groom stood upon the platform until all the guests had passed by them and had shaken their hands, many stopping to have a little chat. The last to do this were the ushers and the White House aides, and they were followed by the employés of the White House and the servants, who were all received.

At 12:55, the bride and groom passed unostentatiously through the corridor, with a trail of intimate friends following them, into the private dining-room, where they stood in front of the marble mantel and partook of refreshments, solid and liquid.

DRANK MANY TOASTS.

The bride drank many toasts with this friend and that, and managed to snatch a few bites of something more substantial. The wedding cake, a large, low white cake, decked with orange blossoms, was brought to her by Maj. McCawley, naval aide at the White House, who proferred his sword to cut it with. This she seized, and laughingly and gracefully did the deed, making one strong firm incision; then, handing the sword back, she told the waiter to finish. The cake was then partaken of by the guests, many taking a slice away with them, until the supply gave out. It was not put up in boxes for guests, as is frequently done at modern weddings.

Mrs. Longworth was almost devoured by her friends, as was Longworth by his. They stood some feet apart but as telegrams were received in batches of from five to twenty, they read them together, and were frequently thrown into gales of laughter over the contents. One was from Uniontown, Pa. It read: "We have named our baby Alice. She has just arrived." It was from a stranger.

Mr. and Mrs. George C. Lee of Boston, grandparents of the bride on the maternal side, were conspicuous guests. Mrs. Lee was gowned in black silk velvet trimmed elaborately with point lace, and wearing many superb diamonds. She is a distinguished-looking, elderly woman. After the ceremony, she took her place in the corridor, sitting near the dining-room, the servants runing back and forth waiting upon her attentively while Mr. Lee stood near, enjoying the scene. They are house guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

MRS. ROOSEVELT'S GOWN.

Mrs. Roosevelt's gown was a superb piece of material, of heavy cream brocade satin, with much brown in the brocade and golden threads running through it. It was made with a very long square train and the bodice was trimmed with much rare lace. She wore a diamond necklace and some diamond pins.

Mrs. Nelly Grant Sartoris wore a gown of rich mauve chiffon velvet trimmed with sable. On the bodice was duchesse point lace, and about her throat was a necklace of pearls with a clasp of large pearls surrounded with diamonds. She wore a large black hat with white plumes and a sable collar, and carried a cane of brown enamel with a gold tip, upon which she leaned heavily at times, as she has been in bad health for some time, and is not strong yet. She is extremely good looking, however, and in her face is the same pleasant expression which is familiar to all who knew her as a girl. She looks only about twenty-five, with not a trace of gray hair apparent—only a few more pounds avoirdupois.

OYSTER BAY (L. I.) Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In honor of the wedding of Miss Roosevelt, the church bells in this village were rung at noon today.

Sexton Charles Seeley of Christ Episcopal Church, of which Mrs. Roosevelt is a communicant, and Miss Roosevelt a member, began ringing the bell in that church tower. Simultaneously, the bells of the Presbyterian Church and St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church joined in the joyful sounds and continued ringing five minutes.

Meantime, citizens meeting on the street, exchanged best wishes for the bride.

ELABORATE TOILETS MAKE MOST BRILLIANT PICTURE.

Daylight Ceremony Does Not Detract from Color, Which Has Added Luster from Jewels Worn—Ladies of the President's Household Wear No Hats—Mrs. Bonaparte's Dress.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—No social event in recent years in America has induced so many elaborate and beautiful toilets as the wedding of Miss Roosevelt and Mr. Longworth. The gowns and hats of the ladies present were in keeping with the import of the event. While the display of jewels was not so great as it might have been had the wedding been an evening affair, it was nevertheless notable.

Many of the women present wore jewels which matched in color their gowns, or, if they did not match, they entered harmoniously into the color scheme of the toilets. As the wedding was a morning function, the women guests, for the most part, kept on their hats. The ladies of the President's household, however, wore no hats. Some of the notable toilets were the following:

Mrs. William S. Cowles, a sister of the President, wore sapphire-blue satin, trimmed with bands of velvet the same shade. The transparent yoke and collar were of Point de Venice lace, the sleeves being elbow length and finished with lace ruffles.

Mrs. Douglas Robinson, sister of the President, a reseda velvet, bands of sable trimming on the skirt and edging the jacket, which was in Empire effect.

MRS. LONGWORTH.

Comtesse de Chambrun, sister of Mr. Longworth, was in brown chiffon velvet embroidered and trimmed with cloth of gold. Her sable toque had white aigrette.

Mrs. Fairbanks, wife of the Vice-President, was in violet chiffon and velvet with hat and gloves to match, the hat having long violet plumes.

Mrs. Cortelyou, wife of the Postmaster-General, white voile, the fronts of skirt and bodice being of hand embroidery. Large white hat with plumes.

MRS. BONAPARTE IN HEIRLOOM.

Mrs. Bonaparte, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, wore the historic black lace which was sent by the King of Westphalia, Jerome Bonaparte, to his daughter, and which has been handed down to the Secretary and Mrs. Bonaparte. The lace is in flounces of great depth and was worn over coral satin. She also wore the necklace pins and hair ornaments which Jerome presented to his American wife, Martha Patterson, of Baltimore, before he became King of Westphalia.

Mrs. Metcalfe, wife of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, was in blue velvet with large white hat and blue plumes.

watches, vases, loving cups, punch-bowls, pictures, rare laces, exquisite silk and embroideries from the Orient, delicate carvings in ivory, and the precious metals, handsome rugs and tapestries, rare silver and china table services, most of them manufactured from special designs, and every other gift which possibly could make glad the heart of a bride.

Among the many beautiful things received are some rare old laces and jewels from Mrs. Lee, grandmother of the bride. Had the bride's mother lived these very likely would have gone to her. In the circumstances, they are more precious in the eyes of Mrs. Longworth than scores of the gifts intrinsically of greater value.

SOME OF HUNDREDS.

As heretofore indicated, no list of presents was made public, and no complete list that is given approximately accurate can be compiled, but among the hundreds received by Miss Roosevelt are the following:

President Loubet of France—A magnificent Gobelin tapestry, made expressly for Miss Roosevelt. It is in shape long and narrow and portrays scenes renowned in the history of France. This tapestry is made only for the French government, and never is placed on sale. Its value, therefore, is purely conjectural in dollars and cents. It was presented to Miss Roosevelt on behalf of President Loubet by Ambassador Jusserand. At the same time, Ambassador Jusserand, on behalf of himself and Mme. Jusserand, presented to Miss Roosevelt an exquisite fan of white ostrich plumes set on tortoise shell sticks and bearing the monogram of Miss Roosevelt's initials in gold.

Emperor William of Germany—A bracelet of special design, studded with gems of rare value, one of the finest works of the jeweler's art. It was presented by Ambassador Speck von Sternburg.

The Emperor of Japan—Two beautifully chased vases of silver and a piece of wonderful Japanese embroidery. The latter is a piece of silk, eight feet square. Its left corner shows a background of heavy gold thread, but the greater part of the piece is embroidered with chrysanthemums done in white silk on gold.

CUBA SENDS PEARLS.

Republic of Cuba—A splendid necklace of selected pearls, the design of the piece being made in Paris on the order of the Cuban government. It is one of the most valuable gifts received by the bride.

The Emperor of Austria—A diamond and pearl pendant exquisitely wrought.

The Empress-Dowager of China—A handsomely made dower chest, completely filled with rare gifts of silks, embroideries, ivory carvings and lovely bric-a-brac.

The King of Italy—A mosaic table of superb workmanship and great beauty, depicting scenes of Italian life. It was manufactured especially for Miss Roosevelt in Florence.

The King of Spain—Pieces of antique jewelry of rare design and value.

King Edward sent a gift to the bride, but the character of it has not been disclosed.

While some of the Ambassadors and Ministers accredited to this capital from foreign countries sent individual presents to Miss Roosevelt, the majority of them presented to her offerings of flowers. Mr. Takahira, former Minister of Japan, cabled directions that a handsome floral offering be made to the bride in his name.

VASE FROM SWEDEN.

Mr. Grip, Minister of Sweden, presented an exquisite vase which he purchased in Paris; Baron Moncheur, the Belgian Minister, a piece of handsome bric-a-brac; Minister Quesada of Cuba and Mme. Quesada, a set of eight pieces of silverware lined with gold and bearing the initials of the bride, "A. R."

Members of the President's Cabinet presented individual gifts but only a few of them are known.

Secretary and Mrs. Taft presented a pair of elaborately chased silver table vases of American manufacture; Secretary and Mrs. Bonaparte, a handsome piece de Millieu of repousse silver. In the center, several fanciful figures have been wrought. The edge of the piece is open worked; Secretary and Mrs. Shaw, a chocolate set of rare Worcester ware, inlaid with silver, and Attorney-General Moody, a pair of silver candlesticks elegantly chased and of beautiful design.

What is known as the Taft Philippine party, including those who, with Miss Roosevelt, made the trip last summer to the Orient, joined in a beautiful and costly gift to the bride. It is a necklace of gold with the alternate links studded with diamonds, bearing a magnificent aqua marine pendant surrounded with diamonds. The aqua marine pendant is a stone of remarkable size and color, costing $1500 unmounted. A card accompanying the gift is inscribed: "With love and best wishes to our Alice from members of the Taft party."

FROM CONGRESSMEN.

Mr. Longworth's associates in Congress united in the presentation to the bride of three beautiful presents.

The New York delegation gave an exquisite service of Favril glass, each piece having the peacock eye in its center and no two pieces being of precisely the same hue. The service consists of five dozen wine glasses, finger bowls and plates.

The Ohio delegation gave the bride a heavy silver loving cup. It is more than two feet in height and bears festoons of roses in repousse work around the top and bottom.

The House Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which Mr. Longworth is a member, also gave the bride a loving cup of silver, beautifully chased and lined with gold. It is inscribed to "Alice Lee Roosevelt" in script.

SENT HANDSOME JEWEL.

The Ambassador of Austria and Baroness Hengelmueller sent a handsome jewel, consisting of a great sapphire and selected diamonds. The Ambassador of Germany and Baroness Speck von Sternburg presented Miss Roosevelt an exquisite set of Dresden china plates, manufactured to order and bearing the bride's initials in monogram.

The Vice-President and Mrs. Fairbanks, a set of handsome bouillon cups of beautiful chased silver lined with gold.

Senator and Mrs. Foraker, a beautiful plate mirror service with a heavy frame of embossed silver.

Senator and Mrs. Knox, a jewel box of elegantly chased silver.

The Ambassador to Great Britain and Mrs. Reid, a magnificent diamond dog collar.

The Secretary of State and Mrs. Root, a long chain of beautiful turquoise, elegantly mounted.

FANS FAVORITE PRESENTS.

Fans were a favorite article of presentation to the bride and she received a notable and handsome collection of them. Besides that of the French Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand, the Viscount de Chambrun sent a hand-painted fan and Senator and Mrs. Spooner of Wisconsin presented a jeweled fan of exquisite workmanship.

No adequate idea of the gifts to the bride can be given with any degree of accuracy but the foregoing will convey some notion of their character. Those made by the members of the immediate families of the bride and bridegroom are held sacred. The gift of Mr. Longworth to his bride was a necklace of selected diamonds perfectly matched, the stones being beautifully mounted. This probably was intrinsically the most valuable gift received by Miss Roosevelt.

GIVERS' SPIRIT CHIEF VALUE.

Few brides not of so-called royal birth ever have been the recipients of so many and such valuable gifts as were received by Miss Roosevelt. For weeks these tributes of love and affection have been pouring into the White House. The bride and the members of her family were almost overwhelmed by the number and character of the presents.

It was not that the presents are so valuable, intrinsically, although in the aggregate they represent a great sum, but it was the spirit which animated the givers which appealed strongly to Miss Roosevelt.

Many of the presents were accompanied by oral or written expressions of the deep and sincere regard in which the bride is held by persons of all classes, not only in her own country, but throughout the world.

Weeks ago, on behalf of their daughter, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt let it be known that certain proffered gifts could not be accepted. It was their desire that the wedding, so far as the presents were concerned, at least, should be stripped of official character. An intimation was conveyed through diplomatic channels that it was the desire of the President that no gifts should be made to Miss Roosevelt on behalf of foreign governments; that presents of such nature properly could be received only from the executives of the governments through the ambassadors or ministers credited to the American government. The only present, therefore, which may be said comes directly from a nation is that of the Cuban republic. It was provided for prior to the receipt of the President's delicate intimation.

HUNDREDS OF REMEMBRANCES.

During the past week hundreds of remembrances, so particularly precious in the eyes of a bride, have arrived at the White House for Miss Roosevelt. By far the greater number of them came from personal friends and acquaintances. Her joy was clouded, in a measure, by the receipt of presents from people of whom she never had heard, who followed the gifts immediately with requests for invitations to the wedding. Some of the gifts were costly, but those which so evidently were sent with the idea thereby of obtaining an invitation to the wedding were returned instantly to the senders.

It can be said with perfect confidence in the accuracy of the statement that, while many presents received by the bride are very valuable, some of them being particularly so by reason of the circumstances surrounding them, the value of the gifts has been greatly exaggerated. Many of those who remembered Miss Roosevelt with presents are by no means wealthy, and it is quite certain they could not afford to make such presents as they have been credited with having given. The definite announcement of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt that no list of the bridal gifts would be made public was approved cordially by friends of the families of both the bride and the bridegroom but it has placed a premium on the exaggeration so greatly deprecated by the President himself.

UNFORTUNATE ANNOYANCE.

So remarkable have some of the accounts of the presents been that their publication has brought to Miss Roosevelt an unfortunate annoyance. Her mail for many days has been flooded with letters from women and men from all parts of the country, urging her to give to them from her plentiful store of duplicate gifts, one thing or another. Some of the stories of suffering and privation they told really were pitiful. Even in the time of her life's greatest happiness, Miss Roosevelt was made sorrowful by some of the appeals to her generosity. Of course she was unable to gratify the writers of the letters because primarily they had been misled by publications which were quite inaccurate.

In addition to appeals for charity Miss Roosevelt received as a result of the exaggerated reports of the value of her presents, letters, unsigned as a rule, menacing in their tone. No actual threats were made but the letters contained sinister intimations of future trouble, perhaps for the country, through the presentation to the daughter of an American President of gifts so costly as to be merely a display of the wealth of the givers.

WAS TWELFTH MARITAL EVENT

WHITE HOUSE HAD BEEN SCENE OF ELEVEN OTHERS.

Saturday's Affair Was by Far the Most Elaborate and in Many Respects the Most Notable Ever Celebrated in the Mansion—List Might Have Been Greatly Extended.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—Romance and history have made the White House the most interesting home in America. Of the two romance probably has contributed more to endear the mansion to the people—men as well as women—than history. The weddings which have taken place within its classic portals appeal with keenest interest to every true American.

In the century of its history the White House has been the scene of twelve weddings. That of Miss Roosevelt and Mr. Longworth today was the largest by far, and in some respects the most notable wedding that ever was celebrated in the mansion. Miss Roosevelt was the fourth daughter of a President of the United States to be given in marriage in this official home of the Chief Executive.

The list of 1000 guests invited to witness the ceremony today is several times larger than that invited to any previous White House wedding and yet the President and Mrs. Roosevelt have extended the list many times without satisfying the desires of all their friends.

GUESTS FOR SPACE.

The list therefore was made up with the idea of including in it certain official classes, relatives of the two families and the intimate personal friends of the bride and groom. As was to have been expected the number of guests taxed the capacity of the White House to the utmost.

Prior to the remodeling of the interior of the White House three years ago it would not have been possible to entertain so large a company in the house as attended today's wedding. That fact probably accounts for the comparatively small list of guests at White House weddings. Thirty-two years ago Ellen W. Grant, who endeared herself to the American people as "Nellie" Grant, one of the best-beloved and most popular women, became a White House bride. The number of guests at her wedding was about two hundred, and writers of the time say that was all that could be accommodated comfortably.

INITIAL WEDDING.

The first White House wedding took place during the administration of James Madison, whose wife was probably the most popular woman of her time in America. Mrs. Madison's youngest sister, Lucy Payne Washington, widow of a nephew of President Washington, was married on the evening of

HOOTS BY THE OWL
Plenty of Goods
"The Owl's" stockrooms have to be bountifully supplied before we advertise any article at a price unless it's a "clean-up" or a "special buy"—and the number is limited. Then we tell you so—and the reason why.

The point is here— you don't go to an "Owl" store and get the answer, "We're just out," after you come a long distance to get come special article—at a price. Nothing much more annoying than the "just out" business. Has a suspicious look, hasn't it? Goods in plenty at "The Owl" stores—genuine reductions—for "The Owl" certainly does "dictate drug prices" hereabouts.

How many "special sales" at other drug stores look good to you after you get into contact with them? How many "just out" drug sales have you run up against within the last few months? "The Owl" does not misrepresent. When "The Owl" advertises a cut, it "proves up" a cut when you get to the store. As for other drug stores —well— Hoot!

MISS ROOSEVELT WEDS.

March 11, 1811, to a widower who resided in Kentucky. The marriage was witnessed by prominent officials and members of the Diplomatic corps.

Just after the war of 1812, the second White House wedding occurred. This also was in the administration of Madison, the bride, Miss Anna Todd, being a cousin of Mrs. Madison. The groom was John C. Jackson, then member of the House of Representatives from Virginia. On account of the war, society affairs were at low tide in Washington, and the marriage was not so notable as the first one.

DURING MONROE'S PERIOD.

The wedding of Miss Maria Hester Monroe, the first daughter of a President to be married in the White House, was a distinct disappointment in a social way. On March 19, 1820, she was married in the Blue Room to Samuel Lawrence Gouverneur of New York, who was acting as private secretary to President Monroe. It was purely a family affair, not even the members of the President's Cabinet being invited. The restrictions placed on the list of guests, and some other matters concerning the marriage, formed the subject of considerable sarcastic comment at the time.

The fourth wedding in the White House was that of a President's son, John Adams, the son and private secretary of President John Quincy Adams on February 10, 1828, married in the Blue Room his cousin, Miss Mary Helen of Philadelphia. It was a brilliant social function, and was made peculiarly notable by the fact that President Adams led the Virginia reel in the dance that followed the ceremony. The wedding and a series of parties given the young couple afterward by the President and Mrs. Adams were the greatest social functions of that time.

THREE IN JACKSON'S TIME.

During the administration of President Jackson three marriages were celebrated in the White House. The first was that of Miss Delia Lewis of Nashville, Tenn., to Alphonse Joseph Yver Paget, secretary of the French Legation. It took place in the Blue Room, and was witnessed by the members of the Cabinet and their wives, members of the Diplomatic Corps, and personal friends. The bride was given away by President Jackson. Shortly afterward Miss Mary Easton, also of Tennessee, a niece of Mrs. Jackson, was married in the Blue Room to Lucien B. Polk. The third marriage in the White House during the Jackson administration was that of Miss Emily Martin, who became the bride of Lewis Randolph, a grandson of Thomas Jefferson.

The eighth White House wedding was that of another daughter of a President. Elizabeth, the third daughter of President John Tyler, was married in the Blue Room on January 31, 1842, to William Waller of Williamsburg, Va. It was intended that the marriage should be quiet and simple, but it developed into a great social event. It was at this wedding that one of the bridesmaids expressed surprise to Daniel Webster that Miss Tyler should relinquish her White House home, and the gayety of Washington society for a humble Virginia residence. "Ah," responded Mr. Webster, "love rules the court, the camp, the grove, and love is heaven and heaven is love."

MARRIAGE OF NELLIE GRANT.

Then in order on May 12, 1874, the wedding of Nellie Grant took place. Up to that time it was by far the most brilliant social function of any kind that ever had taken place in the White House. The bridegroom was Algernon C. F. Sartoris of England, who had come across the water and had won the hand and heart of the best beloved of America's daughters. The ceremony occurred in the historic east room, the scene of today's wedding, and in many respects the wedding of today and that of thirty-two years ago resembled each other closely. The floral decorations were magnificent, the music exquisite and every detail was developed beautifully. The 200 guests present represented the most important officials of the government and members of the Diplomatic Corps. The ceremony which united Miss Roosevelt to Mr. Longworth was performed on almost identically the same spot where Nellie Grant and Algernon Sartoris pledged their lives to each other. Hundreds of beautiful and costly presents were made to the bride. After an elaborate wedding breakfast in the state dining-room, Mr. and Mrs. Sartoris, amid a shower of rice in dainty slippers, were whirled away to the railroad staion in a coach drawn by four handsome bay horses and left for New York on a perfectly-equipped special train.

DURING HAYES'S TERM.

One wedding took place in the White House during the administration of President Hayes. His niece, Miss Platt, in June, 1878, became the bride of Gen. Russell Hastings, the ceremony being performed in the Blue Room.

Grover Cleveland was the only President of the United States married in the White House. His marriage to Miss Frances Folsom was celebrated in the Blue Room on the evening of June 2, 1886. The room was superbly decorated with living green and cut flowers, and the entire lower part of the White House had been transformed into a bower of floral beauty. The guests were limited to the relatives of the President and Miss Folsom, members of the Cabinet and their wives, and Private Secretary Lamont and Mrs. Lamont. The Marine Band furnished the music. The President and Mrs. Cleveland took an extended trip through the West.

For twenty years until today no wedding has been celebrated in the White House, and in the annals of romance and history of the mansion there is no record of so elaborate and beautiful a ceremony as the wedding of Alice Lee Roosevelt and Nicholas Longworth.

SHE DISPROVES SUPERSTITION.

FIVE TIMES BRIDESMAID, ALICE STILL IS A BRIDE.

Mrs. Longworth a New York Girl, But Her Social Triumphs Have Been Such That Nation Claims Her—Educated by Governess and at Private School.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Three times a bridesmaid, never a bride," was a superstition disproved today, for Mr. Longworth's bride has acted not thrice, but five times in this capacity.

As a very young girl, she acted as a bridesmaid at the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Lee, Jr., in Trinity Church. Since her father has been President, Miss Roosevelt served as a bridesmaid at the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. David Goodrich. Twice in New York she has acted as a bridesmaid—once, when Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Douglass Robinson were married; and once again, at the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Delano Roosevelt. When Mr. and Mrs. Robert Goelet were married in Philadelphia Miss Roosevelt was one of the bridesmaids, but she never served in this role in Washington.

Bright, buoyant, original, with more than a dash of her father's unconventionality, here is the young wife's record:

Alice Lee Roosevelt, born in New York, February 12, 1884; educated by a governess and at private school; début at the White House, January 1, 1902; christened the Kaiser's yacht Meteor, February 5, 1902; tour to the Philippines, China and Japan, 1905; engagement to Nicholas Longworth announced December 13, 1905; Mrs. Nicholas Longworth February 17, 1906.

IS A NEW YORK GIRL.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth was born in the old Roosevelt home in New York City, in the same house in which her father was born. Miss Roosevelt celebrated her twenty-second birthday at the White House last Monday evening, and entertained many of the friends of her girlhood.

The autumn before her début, Miss Roosevelt had spent in a visit to Cuba, where she was the guest of Gov.-Gen. and Mrs. Leonard Wood, in the palace at Havana, where she was shown the same attention which she received last summer on her visit to the Orient.

Three years ago, in company with Miss Edith Root, daughter of the Secretary of State, she made a visit to New Orleans, during the Mardi Gras season, and every attention was shown her by the citizens of that city. Later in the same year, she made a visit to St. Louis, in company with Miss Alice Warder of this city, where she was entertained and took part in many official entertainments by the commissioners of the exposition.

GIFT CUBA'S GRATITUDE.

LETTER OF PRESIDENT PALMA.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—Upon the occasion of the presentation to Miss Roosevelt by Señor Gonzalo de Quesada, Cuban Minister, of the pearl necklace voted by the Cuban Congress, an autograph letter from President Estrada Palma, accompanying the gift, was handed to her, of which the following is a copy:

"Miss Roosevelt: I have the satisfaction of enclosing an authentic copy of the law of the 30th of last January, voted by the National Congress unanimously and by acclamation, which faithfully interprets the will and sentiments of the whole Cuban people.

"In carrying out the effect of said law, I have the honor to offer you as a wedding gift a pearl necklace, which will be handed you by our diplomatic representative, Señor Gonzalo de Quesada. Accept it as a spontaneous offering of the affection of the Cuban people, and at the same time as a sincere testimonial of the consecration and gratitude that Cuba feels for your illustrious father, their friend—always their friend, in war, as well as in peace.

"I am respectfully, your attendant and faithful servant,

[Signed] "T. ESTRADA PALMA."

Miss Roosevelt and Mr. Longworth were guests at two functions last night. There was a dinner at the Alibi Club, of which the host was Maj. McCauley of the Marine Corps, one of the White House social aides, and a reception was given by Senator Kean of New Jersey, a relative of Miss Roosevelt by marriage. Most of the 300 guests at the reception were out-of-town folks, who came to attend the wedding.

EXPLOSION KILLS THREE.

Dynamite House of Hercules Powder Plant Near Louisiana, Mo., Blows Up.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LOUISIANA (Mo.) Feb. 17.—Three men were killed and twenty girls were injured by an explosion at the Hercules Powder plant, eighteen miles north of here today. The three men killed, employés of the plant, were named Booth, Wright and Nord, and all lived in Hannibal, Mo.

The accident occurred in the punching house, which is equipped with machinery, and the debris from this structure demolished the old punching house where a number of women and boys were at work punching dynamite into moulds which form sticks. All of the women were slightly injured, but fortunately the building they were in did not blow up.

The fact that the punching of dynamite in the house in which the explosion occurred is done by machinery accounts for the fact that there were but three persons in the building at the time.

The Hercules plant is one of the largest dynamite manufacturers in the country. It produced one-fourth of the output of the United States last year, according to the census. The plant is worth one-half million dollars and employs 200 persons.

DASH IN AN AUTO ENDS AT AN ALTAR.

A LITTLE luncheon at the Van Nuys Hotel; a trolley ride to Pasadena; a timely meeting with friends there; some whispered words; a scurrying to and fro; a steaming, panting automobile; a dash of sixty miles over roads of scenic splendor on a springlike day; a hasty confab after hours with a marriage license clerk in the pretty city of Riverside; a minister; the vows—and Albert Gallatin Cook of Los Angeles, and Miss Maud Burtitt Milligan of Chicago were wed.

Not an elopement. No! No!.

Simply a young woman whose troth had been plighted for many weeks; whose parents knew of her intent to wed, and who agreed heartily in her choice, but who sought to escape the explanations and the flutterings that a formal announcement would involve.

Wed on the day that Miss Roosevelt became the bride of Congressman Longworth at the White House, Miss Milligan essayed to wed the man of her choice and to have the event go unheralded until she, herself, should announce it in her own way to her friends. That she failed in her fond desire is not her fault.

Miss Milligan is a daughter of the Victoria Hotel in Chicago, a select hostelry on Michigan avenue that numbers among its patrons not only some of the best people of the United States, but of foreign countries.

With her mother and sister, Miss Milligan has passed two seasons in Los Angeles. They have a pretty bungalow at No. 4920 Echo street.

Mr. Cook is a descendant of one of the old families of Los Angeles. He is 25 years old; his bride is 23.

They met here two years ago at the Angelus Hotel, when Miss Milligan came out with her mother and sister to spend the winter. It was a "match" almost from the first. But the engagement did not become known to the families of the young pair until recently. When the date for the wedding was determined upon, none but the young bride and groom know; they won't tell.

At any rate, it is known that Miss Milligan did not fancy the idea of a "splurge." It was all right for the Nation's bride of yesterday to have a big wedding and all that, but for her—well, a license and even a justice of the peace would do. Her mother agreed with her.

So they met yesterday at the Van Nuys Hotel and had luncheon, talked over their plans and went to Pasadena, where they had a friend, Harry Zier, whose speedy auto was good for any kind of a spin outside the county limits.

Into the big touring car they piled, together with Mr. Zier, Stephen Templet and Cabboll Barton, and the sixty-mile run was made to Riverside.

They reached there after the Courthouse had closed, but the marriage license clerk always is easy to find and the necessary license soon was forthcoming; whereupon a minister was found and they were pronounced man and wife with all the formality that the law and a clear conscience require.

Then a telegram was sent to Mrs. Milligan, who, ill at the Echo-street bungalow, was unable to accompany the party. Soon afterward a response was received, conveying the congratulations of the family.

Instead of returning to Los Angeles last night, the young couple registered at the Glenwood Hotel in the orange city. They are expected to return home within a few days.

CHILDREN FACE MANY DANGERS

The Work and Worry and Close Confinement of Their School Days and How They Can Be Safeguarded.

To thousands of boys and girls the confinement of the schoolroom and the duties imposed by their studies are a strain, a very serious strain. Many become broken in health by this strain and are physically weakened for life.

Give your boys and girls good, healthful, pure, strengthening food and you go far toward removing all dangers.

Malta-Vita, the crisp, delicious, whole wheat food, contains every food element necessary to the maintenance and upbuilding of the human body and mind—especially beneficial for children.

"Malta-Vita" is no meaningless coined word. It stands for its literal translation from the Latin and means exactly what it says, "Malt Life." The original phrase "For the blood is the life" is the starting point and final winning post of Malta-Vita, on account of its large percentage of maltose, or malt sugar, a natural sweetening agent, easily digestible and readily assimilated by the human economy, forming rich, healthy blood.

Malta-Vita is so good to eat—not at all like the tasteless variety of breakfast foods—that the whole family welcome its appearance on the table. And it's always ready to eat. Now for sale by all grocers.

MAY CHANGE THE STARTING.

JOCKEY CLUB DISCUSSING A PUZZLING MATTER.

[illegible] of Mars Cassidy's "Walk Up" is Very Favorably Spoken of and May be Adopted as the Rule. Plan Has Been Used With Gratifying Success at New Orleans Track.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It was asserted yesterday by a man high in racing affairs in this city that Starter Mars Cassidy's use of the "walkup" and stop system of starting on the Metropolitan circuit is not due to a compulsory order from the jockey club, in so far as the walk to the barrier is concerned. The governing body of the turf, acting in its authority, insists only that the horses shall be sent away from a standing start. "That part of the method used by Cassidy last year, of walking the horses to the barrier from a point fifty or one hundred feet back, is entirely up to him," said this gentleman. "If the jockey club had desired to dispense with the walk-up, he could have done so in a moment. He believes, however, that his standing start is the best, and deprived of the opportunity to use all of it, he retained a part.

"That the walk-up method in connection with the standing start helps matters is a mooted question. Personally I believe he would achieve beter results by allowing the horses to approach the barrier without a preliminary line-up. Others hold a different opinion, but the fact remains that the jockey club insists on a standing start. Anything that occurs previous to springing the barrier is at Cassidy's own discretion. He is not tied down."

The question as to whether or not the jockey club will order a charge of method of starting this year is one that is being discussed at great length among racing people through the winter months. Especially it has become a topic of conversation since Starter Cassidy got into the stride at the City Park track in New Orleans by using the system that he originated three years ago of walking the horses up to the barrier and allowing them to break while still in motion.

BALL MEDAL STOLEN.

BRUSH LOSES EMBLEM.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The world's championship baseball medal, owned by John T. Brush, baseball magnate, was stolen last night. The robber was seen by the housemaid passing the room of Mrs. Brush, where the medal was kept. He escaped by climbing to the roof of the front porch and jumping fifteen feet to the ground.

The medal was received by Mr. Brush, owner of the New York National League Baseball Club, at the close of the last baseball season, after the Giants had won the world's championship. It was of gold, studded with diamonds, and was highly prized by the owner.

THE AUTO TRADE.

NOTES OF THE GAME.

E. R. Thomas, the father of the Thomas Flyer, has been in Southern California for some time planning an auto tour. His private car is scheduled to arrive next Thursday at the garage of the Western Motor Car Company. It is the regular Thomas model, but it has a few fancy things on it that will interest the fraternity.

L. E. Bennett, brother of E. Jr. Bennett of the Wayne general agency, has taken a special agency and will sell the Wayne car throughout Southern California. His field of activity will embrace all territory in the southern part of the State not already contracted for. He has placed his order for a carload, and already reports several sales.

Harry L. Olive, manager for J. T. Bill and Company, is out in the open with a new record. He claims the biggest sale record for a new car of the touring class. The Stoddard-Dayton is new to Los Angeles, but Olive reports ten sales for the past month. The men who have bought the new car are S. B. Church, Harry Turner, Fred Flint, Lester Wilson, J. M. Arnaz, N. W. Church, R. D. Clark, Frederick C. Hornby, E. M. Lyons and Edward R. Feurborn. The last named was one of the judges on the road run to San Diego.

The A. W. Gump Automobile Company is getting in a line of sundries, and they say that the new car they will represent in this territory, the Jackson, will be in the end of the week.

The Western Motor Car Company received this week a Pope-Toledo for Mrs. C. E. Anthony. The body has been especially finished in California colors, the upper part being a California sky-blue and the running gear poppy yellow. It is equipped with a new horn that Earle C. Anthony brought back with him from the New York show. It is built somewhat on the principle of the old "steam devil" whistle. A friction wheel drives through a flexible shaft, and revolves a slotted disk at a high rate of speed. This sucks in the air and makes a regular siren yell with a varying pitch according to the speed.

The Middleton Motor Car Company received yesterday their new Mark XLVII Columbia car, that they have been expecting for the past weeks. The machine is rated at 40-45 horse power, but it is said that the engines have developed 57 1-2 on the testing block. The appearance of the new car differs from the old Mark XLV as the makers have adopted the Mercedes type of cooler and bonnet for this model. It is this car and the Mark XLVI that the new steel has been made for, and the manufacturers expect great things from it. The crank shafts are hogged out of a solid block weighing 225 pounds, and then machined cold, the finished shaft weighing about sixty pounds. The new model also has a "fool-proof" carburetor that is set at the factory, and is said to require no adjustment. The car is listed at $4500 to $5500, according to body.

The Lee Motor Company have moved into their new building, and expect three carloads of the new Cadillac in this week. The place has a large floor space, and the company will do a garage and repair business. They expect to have an all-night service at the garage, which will be of decided advantage to their patrons.

The Napier Automobile and Garage Company held a meeting yesterday and elected the following officers: President, J. A. Clairmonte; secretary, F. K. Rule; treasurer, Frank A. McDonald. The company has taken over all of Clairmonte's machines, and is preparing to push the Napier for all it is worth. They will soon get into their new building on Spring street, near Seventh, where they will have a complete garage and repair shop. The place will have a sixty-foot glass front. The company will handle both the American and the English Napiers.

A large touring party in model "K" Wintons will leave Los Angeles on Wednesday morning, next, for Riverside, where they will take in the polo tournament on Washington's Birthday. They expect to be gone four or five days touring the surrounding country.

In J. J. Davis's car will be Mrs. J. J. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Gillis and Gen. M. H. Sherman.

In C. L. Bundy's car will be Mrs. Bundy, Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Loomis and Miss Clarke.

In H. M. Gorham's car will be Mrs. Gorham, Mr. and Mrs. Wellington Clarke and Hal Gorham.

In E. M. Hills's car will be Mrs. Hills and T. H. Dudley and wife.

[NEWS REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.]

ROW OVER DOPE IN COUNTY JAIL.

ONE NEGRO IN DUNGEON AND ANOTHER IS ARRESTED.

"Yen Shee" Found by Jailer is Biscuits Delivered by Man Who is Charged With Attempting to Smuggle It Within Walls—The Discovery Leads to Savage Fight.

SAN BERNARDINO, Feb. 17.—Harry Warren, alias Isaac, is in jail, charged with smuggling opium to prisoners, and James Poole, a vicious negro prisoner, has been thrown into the dungeon, and will be kept on bread and water for making an attempt to kill Jailer Case.

These jail occurrences have been kept quiet by the officers, while an investigation of the opium smuggling business has been under investigation, and with the arrest of Warren this afternoon the affair was made public, though other arrests may follow.

It appears that Poole and Warren, both negroes, are inveterate "yen shee" fiends. Recently Poole was arrested, and sent to jail for a long term for attempting to kill a merchant named Lauterbach, who was driven into his store by Poole, the latter being armed with a double-barrel shotgun.

Last night Warren delivered at the County Jail a number of biscuits for Poole. The latter's evident anxiety aroused the suspicions of the jailer, who investigated, and found "yen shee" spread under the biscuits. Poole was standing by, and made a catlike spring at the jailer, who was too quick for the negro.

Poole then grabbed a bar, and while fuming with rage, swore he would brain his keeper. Jailer Case soon had his disarmed and in irons, and he was thrown into the dark cell.

Sheriff Ralphs was quickly notified, and his office this afternoon had Warren under arrest. Warren claims he was given the yen shee by a wealthy Chinaman named Nim, who had sold it to be delivered to Poole.

FARNHAM'S NEW WOES.

Trouble is piling up for C. E. Farnham, the alleged representative of "The Standard Collection Agency" of San Francisco, which agency, it is alleged, has no existence. Farnham was arrested here a few days since charged by numerous merchants with swindling them. Then the Elks charged him with falsely representing himself as an Elk, and now comes word from a San Francisco printing house that they want him there for beating a printer's bill.

And that is not all, for the Sheriff learns that the man is wanted also at Salem, Or., for an aggravated case of hotel beating, and also at Stockdale, Seattle, and that the Governor of Oregan has already issued a requisition for him.

Farnham's hearing takes place Wednesday. In the meantime the officers are looking for a pretty woman who was his companion, and who has dropped from sight, taking all the money he secured from the merchants.

SAN BERNARDINO LOCALS.

Horticultural Commissioned Pease is investigtaing a freak orange orchard where all the leaves are falling, and even the fruit is dropping. He supposes the condition is due to overfertilization, but has placed the problem before authorities at Washington and Berkeley.

Jennie M. Zilligen, a Santa Brabara girl, who was married two years ago in Los Angeles, and came to this section for health, died yesterday, her spirit going out while she softly sang a Methodist hymn. The death scene was most remarkable. The deceased was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Parker of Santa Barbara, who clasped hands as she sang her dying song.

Judge Oster this morning made a partial distribution of the estate of the late Lewis Jacobs, distributing $15,000 each to the four heirs, Gussie Poliski, Lena Jacobs, Sarah Newberg and Priscilla Romain.

J. W. England this morning was appointed special administrator of the estate of the late Thomas Y. England, the millionaire leather merchant of Philadelphia, who died suddenly at his home on England Heights, Redlands, last month.

S. F. Zombro of Los Angeles, has sold to G. T. Henslee, a ten-acre orange grove at Highland, consideration being $10,300. The grove is one of the best in the Highland district. The sale includes water rights.

Louis Ghitto, an Italian ice cream and fish peddler, was arrested this morning charged with wilfully tying his aged horse to a post to starve to death. The Italian declares he turned the horse loose to die.

Mrs. Dora Lane secured an interlocutory decree of divorce this morning from A. E. Lane, charging him with being a drunkard and cruel. Mrs. Lane formerly conducted a shooting gallery here, but is now a resident of Redlands.

The Ward divorce case came up this morning before Judge B. F. Bledsoe on a motion of the defendant, John E. Ward, for a continuance, the motion being granted, the hearing being postponed from next Tuesday to April 10.

REDLANDS.

HEAVY TROUBLES FOR LIGHT.

REDLANDS, Feb. 17.—The building of a bath house in San Bernardino seems to have been the cause of getting John E. Light of this city into no end of trouble. When the ground for the building was purchased of B. W. Cave, K. C. Wells and C. J. Curtis, all of this city, they took a mortgage on the property, at the same time including a mortgage on the home place of Mr. Light in this city for $6000, the total amounting to $15,000. A suit for foreclosure has been filed. Yesterday another suit for foreclosure was filed by a San Bernardino hardware firm in the form of an answer and cross complaint, the claim amounting to $1640. In this claim the Redlands parties are also interested. This latter action, however, will have to follow the first mortgage.

Mr. Light has made a trust deed to still other parties to secure bonds in the sum of $25,000 which he issued for the building of the bath house.

C. M. Baxter of this city yesterday filed another suit in foreclosure against Mr. Light, seeking to recover on a note for $2821 given on a note December 3, 1904, and secured by a mortgage on Rialto land. This is further complicated by a Continental trust deed on which there is alleged to be due the sum of $5060.10, and judgment is asked for both amounts.

MUNICIPAL CAMPAIGN.

The municipal campaign was fairly launched last evening at a gathering of thirty citizens held in K. of P. Hall. It seemed to be sense of the meeting that a citizen's ticket be launched and that every citizen should be given the privilege at the convention to express his wishes regarding the personnel of the ticket. The meeting last night was only preliminary and no names were mentioned in connection with the various officers.

The officers of the meeting were Dr. T. M. Blyth, chairman; B. W. Cave, vice-chairman; Dr. J. E. Payton, treasurer. A committee consisting of I. M. Hough, G. D. Buckmaster and K. C. Wells was named to choose a committee of eight men who shall serve as an executive committee.

REDLANDS BREVITIES.

Although it is not generally known Redlands has in its midst a marmalade factory where every year there is put up and shipped hundreds of jars of orange marmalade. The local factory is owned and operated by H. P. D. Kingsbury and the factory has a capacity of 10,000 one pound jars a week. Mr. Kingsbury has recently received orders not only from all parts of the United States for his goods, but also from Alexandria, Egypt; Shanghai, China and London, England.

Olive shipping from Redlands still continues brisk. Something over 200 tons of olives have already been shipped from here this season and it is expected about fifty tons will be shipped. About half the fruit sent from here is converted into oil; the remainder is pickled.

A carload of fine honey was shipped from Redlands this week.

BIG PROFIT IN REALTY.

ANAHEIM, Feb. 17.—John Hartung was called to Los Angeles a day or two ago in response to a telegraphic offer of $30,000 for a piece of property fronting 100 feet on Main street near Washington, which he purchased, several years ago, jointly with R. Krebs for $7500. After he arrived in Los Angeles, however he decided not to sell.

Ed Mantz, who was arrested here a month ago on a charge of rape preferred by a Kansas girl, has returned to Anaheim after being taken East by Sheriff Correll of Washington county. Mantz, it is alleged, says that he "squared" the case by paying the girl $500 in cash, and the Sheriff's expenses. He raised the money by selling property after his arrival in the East. In a statement here just before going East he confessed his guilt. He has gone back to work for a local contractor.

Lewis Denni reports that a large acreage is being planted to sugar beets in the Los Alamitos section, with flattering prospects for a heavy yield. Three years ago Mr. Denni purchased the Pamperi property on Los Angeles street in Anaheim, for $2000. This week he refused an offer of $5500 for it.

G. W. Evarts of Milwaukee, Wis., is a guest of T. A. Darling. The two had not met since 1865, at the close of the war.

OXNARD.

LOCAL NEWS NOTES.

OXNARD, Feb. 17.—The city has begun today the planting of ornamental trees on all residence streets. Palms and acacias will be the principal varieties used. At a special meeting of the Board of Trustees last night, the proposition was discussed of asphalting Fifth street from the depot around the park and to the new Oxnard boulevard. Nothing definite was done.

The Women's Civic League has opened a free reading room on Fifth street, opposite the park. Miss Alice Thatcher is librarian.

The last storm added 1.24 inches to the season's rain supply, making a total of 8.24 inches for the season.

This season's acreage of beets and beans will be the largest the county has ever had. The American Beet Sugar Company has 14,000 acres of beets already contracted for and a probability of 4000 more. Field men say the crop yield to the acre will be larger than ever before.

The furniture firm of S. H. Brown on Fifth street will be sold to Frank Borchard, Raye Swively and Roy Whitman of this city at the close of stock taking. Mr. Brown, with his family, will move East.

The Roth candy store has been purchased from the Los Angeles Board of Trade by J. C. Miller of this city.

WOMEN IN JAIL GIVE UP LOOT.

Clever Pair Give "Reception" to Their Victims.

Accused of Thieving While Working as Maids.

Prisoners Believed to Have Operated Widely.

With all the ease and elegance of hostesses at a pink tea, two beautifully-dressed women diamond thieves held a little informal reception at the County Jail yesterday.

Their guests were three society women whom they had "touched" for their gems—Mrs. F. O. Engstrum, her daughter, Miss Engstrum, and Mrs. "Fred" Engstrum, her daughter-in-law.

From newspaper descriptions of the two pretty diamond thieves, Margaret Sobel and Gertrude Darborn, Mrs. Engstrum recognized them as former "model servants" who had disappeared between days with her tapestry and Mrs. Fred Engstrum's jeweled stickpins.

As they only worked at Engstrum's a month, it is believed they have parted other wealthy Los Angeles people from their vanities and sparkles.

With most fascinating charm of manner they smilingly acknowledged having been irrestibly attracted toward the Engstrum fineries.

Merely as a personal favor and as a matter of graciousness from "loidies" to whom a few gems are no matter, they consented to restore everything.

Disconcerted; why, dear no!

Early in the afternoon Mrs. Engstrum and her daughters went to the Sheriff's office and made inquiries about these women diamond thieves, having read of their arrest for having stolen a diamond necklace from the house of W. F. Knight in Pasadena.

DESCRIPTIONS TALLY.

Their descriptions corresponded exactly with the descriptions of the two women locked in the women's tank of the jail.

Mrs. Engstrum said they would not consent to prosecute the women because of the notoriety of it; but they wanted the two beautiful thieves to give back their plunder.

Franklin took them upstairs and brought out the two women from their cells so as to suddenly confront Mrs. Engstrum and her daughters.

Margaret Sobel walked in first. She is a dazzling blonde, tall and stylish, with a slight Swedish cast of countenance; the other woman, Gertrude Darborn, is a short, dark woman of attractive appearance.

Did they wince or change color? Well, hardly!

Miss Sobel bowed in a pleased manner to Mrs. Engstrum. In a well-bred, low voice, she said, "This is an unexpected pleasure."

The other woman was not less gracious. The deputy began to feel that he had come in on an afternoon tea.

They inquired graciously after the Engstrum family health and seemed politely, very politely, surprised at receiving callers not on their regular day at home.

Franklin butted in suddenly.

"Where are Mrs. Engstrum's diamonds?" he demanded.

"Miss Margaret" raised her eyebrows in pained surprise. When she replied it was to Mrs. Engstrum, in her best society voice.

DIDN'T LIKE SETTING.

She said she didn't care for the way that Mrs. Fred Engstrum had the diamonds set in pins, so she had taken the liberty of sending the three stones to San Francisco to be set in a heavy Roman gold band ring. Just at present they were reposing in Mr. Cohn's paynshop.

Although it would be a pleasure for her to restore the gems to Mrs. Engstrum, $6.75 was due the pawn shop, and circumstances prevented, etc., etc. She would be pleased, however, to give Mrs. Engstrum an order on the pawnshop. Which she did.

When they recovered sufficiently to speak, the ladies asked for the whereabouts of the tapestry.

It was Miss Gertrude who was the tapestry connoisseur. She regretted very much to say that she had sent the tapestry East to a friend. It was such a beautiful example of art work; she really complimented Mrs. Engstrum's good taste. Her friend to whom she sent it, admired it so much. Would Mrs. Engstrum like to have it back? Ah! Then she would be pleased to write to her friend and ask for its return. Wait! Give her a pen and paper and she would do so immediately.

She looked askance at the quality of stationery they gave her, but quickly concealed her distaste in well-bred ease.

WRITES FOR TAPESTRY.

She wrote a letter which she addressed to some one in the East, and, with a smile, sealed it for mailing.

With quite a charming good-by they walked back into their prison tanks and the Engstrums departed. The jewels were found at Cohn's pawnshop, just as they said, and were returned to Mrs. Engstrum.

The two women were arraigned before Justice Congden yesterday morning for robbing the house of W. F. Knight on Los Robles avenue, Pasadena. They asked time in which to engage attorneys and their examination was set for Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

The officers believe they have been working together for years, posing as servants; their specialty is to work in a wealthy family and to suddenly disappear with the loot.

It came out in Pasadena about the visit and robbery of the Engstrums. Deputy Sheriff Franklin, being asked concerning the circumstance last night, at first declined to make a statement, but finally gave the facts rather than have the facts incorrectly stated.

POPE ISSUES ENCYCLICAL.

Strongly Condemns the New French Law Which Separates Church and State.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ROME, Feb. 17.—A papal encyclical was issued today upon the situation of the church in France, strongly condemning the law providing for the separation of church and state, and giving advice to Catholics.

The edict shows that the Holy See did everything possible to avoid the passage of the law, which it terms a great evil to religion and to France, and outlines the church's doctrine upon the subject of relations between the church and state, believing in their union France had found through centuries her greatness and glory.

Examining the law in itself, the encyclical says it is offensive and repugnant to the divine constitution of the church because the public exercise of worship is entrusted to lay associations. The freedom of the church, it is asserted, is submitted to the will of public officials, who are despoiling it of its patrimony. The law, the document continues, cannot fail to injure the internal peace of France, which, especially in the present condition of Europe, is in need of union of all of her children.

It concludes with exhorting the clergy and people to act in accord and with generosity in defense of their religion and to pray to God for the return of tranquility and peace to France.

FRIENDS HONOR PROF. FOSHAY.

HE'S GUEST AT BANQUET BY THE SCHOOLMASTERS' CLUB.

Teachers, Preachers, Judge and Men of Commerce Extol Deeds of Educator Who is About to Lay Down His Charge as Head of City Schools to Assume Other Duties.

Honored by members of his own profession, by his close coworkers, by Christian minister, by Jewish rabbi, by a judge of the Superior Court, and by representatives of the greatest commercial body in the Southwest, the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, was Prof. James A. Foshay at the complimentary banquet tendered in his honor last night at Levy's Café, under the auspices of the City Schoolmasters' Club.

Eighty guests were present. Two long tables were spread and these were handsomely decorated with ropes of smilax, in which were entwined sweet peas and carnations.

Prof. James W. Henry, vice-principal of the Los Angeles High School, was the toastmaster. W. J. Washburn, president of the Board of Education, responded to the first toast, "Our Guest," and paid a glowing tribute to Prof. Foshay.

Prof. Foshay responded, his subject being "The Old and the New." He spoke of the wonderful development of the school interests of Los Angeles, and the pressing demands for expansion in school lines. He gave illustrations of old methods as compared with present day systems, and was optimistic for the future of the public schools.

"In all the development of the nation," said the speaker, "the greatest evolution has been alog the lines of education. Children are to be taught, rather than subjects. The first work of the school is to make true, honest, patriotic men and women out of our boys and girls."

HOW SCHOOLS HAVE GROWN.

In speaking of the growth of the schools here, Prof. Foshay said that when he assumed the duties of the position he is now leaving there were 10,144 children enrolled; now there are 34,795. There was at that time school property valued at $740,670; now the school property of the city is valued at $2,670,000.

Dr. Hugh K. Walker's subject was "Trifles," and he declared that "Trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle. Prof. Foshay has given attention to the trifles in the Los Angeles school system, and thus has developed a system of which all citizens are proud."

Prof. J. F. Millspaugh, president of the State Normal School, spoke of "The School of the Future," and had warm words of praise for the able work done here by the guest of the evening. Dr. Millspaugh believes the school of the future will have a broader field than that of today bcause it will be better understood that its mission is to lay the foundation for the best citizenship; that it will have all its business management conducted by non-partisan school boards who will realize that theirs is the business management, and that educational functions are not included in their duties. He believes the day is soon coming when the teacher will be the best trained and the most highly honored of all public servants.

W. D. Stephens, as a representative of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, brought the greetings of that body, and words of commendation for Prof. Foshay's able administration in the city schools.

JUDGE TRASK ON JUSTICE.

Judge D. K. Trask spoke on the subject of "Justice." Judge Trask was a member of the Board of Education which elected Prof. Foshay to the position of superintendent of the city schools, and he detailed some interesting reminiscences of the school days of that period. He declared that he took great credit for his discernment in helping to select Prof. Foshay for the work he had so well carried on.

"Justice," said Judge Trask, "is something that everybody loves in the abstract, everybody deserves, and very few want." Speaking of the cry of injustice in government, he said: "It is not so much a question of dishonesty as of ignorance and incompetency. We shall solve a great many problems of government by education, and the life of the republic depends not only on the honesty of its citizens, but upon the intelligence of its people.

"I believe that the work begun in the little red schoolhouses of the early days will end in the great universities of the future. The time will come when the ordinary university training will not end the efforts of men for research and investigation; but the brightest minds will go on at public expense with work for which they are best adapted in public investigation bureaus, for the common good of our people."

Other speakers were J. H. Braly, Rabbi S. Hecht and Prof. W. H. Housh. Letters were read from President Gates of Pomona College; Prof. Carpenter, principal of the Pomona city schools, and others.

During the evening vocal selections were rendered by the Schoolmasters' Glee Club, under the direction of Prof. J. B. Poulin.

Prof. Foshay on March 1 will formally assume the duties of his new position as Supreme President of the Fraternal Brotherhood, to which he was elected at the recent session of the Supreme Lodge held in this city. He will retain his residence in Los Angeles, although the duties of his office will require this absence from the city much of the time.

NEW BUILDING PLANNED.

The Builder and Contractor notes the following work in the hands of various architects:

P. W. Ehlers, plans for a one and one-half-story eight-room bungalow to be built in La Paloma tract, Hollywood, for Mr. Balch.

S. Tilden Norton, plans for a two-story eight-room residence, to be erected on the north side of Thirty-sixth street, between Main street and Maple avenue, for Morris Hurwitz.

The same architect, plans for the addition of thirty rooms to the building at No. 2007 South Grand avenue, for E. Beck.

Charles E. Shattuck, drawings for a two-story brick apartment house to be built on Ruth avenue near Fifth street for J. H. Heidt.

Theo. A. Eisen, plans for a two-story frame building to contain four four-room flats.

The same architect, drawings for alterations to the residence of S. J. Keese on Orange street.

F. M. Tyler, plans for a one and one-half-story seven-room frame residence to be erected on Twenty-second and Normandie avenue for Messrs. Ingram & Briggs.

The same architect, plans for a two-story eight-room residence to be constructed on Dorchester street near Oxford avenue, for Mrs. Minnie M. Hartigan.

Dennis & Farwell, plans for a modern five-story and basement building, 50x120 feet, to be constructed on the north side of Third street, between Broadway and Hill street, just west of the Byrne building, for W. S. Collins. The building will be arranged into office suites, each room being supplied with hot and cold water, etc.

The Long Beach Board of Trustees have accepted the offer of $12,500 from Andrew Carnegie for a library building and will increase the amount to $30,000 in order that a building of sufficient size to meet the demands may be built.

Three sets of preliminary plans have been submitted by local architects for the ten-story building to be erected by the International Savings and Exchange Bank at the corner of Spring and Temple streets. It is the intention of the bank corporation to erect upon the lot a ten-story building, providing on the ground floor a banking room and two or three stores. The lot has a frontage of sixty-five feet on Spring street, 120 on Temple and forty New High. It is planned that this irregularly shaped lot will be covered by one of the most imposing structures in the city. It will be directly opposite the new Federal building. Officers of the International Bank say that construction will be begun within six months.

T. R. Griffith has submitted plans for the proposed addition to the public library building, at Redlands. The plans represent an outlay of about $15,000. A new wing will be erected on the eastern end of the building and will be 100x24 feet. There will also be a basement under the new part.

SAN PEDRO IMPROVEMENTS.

The Arthur P. Peri syndicate is soon to erect a big hotel at Seventh and Beacon streets to cost upward of $20,000.

The Elks are to erect a fine home on Seventh and Palos Verdes streets, and the Masons are now selling stock for a new home for that order.

M. L. Campbell has been instructed to notify tenants on Fourth and Beacon, belonging to L. Rees, to vacate by March 1, so that the erection of three-story business house running from Beacon to Front street on Fourth, can be begun.

Indigestion!

Stomach trouble is not really a sickness, but a symptom. It is a symptom that a certain set of nerves is ailing. Not the voluntary nerves that enable you to walk and talk and act—but the AUTOMATIC STOMACH NERVES over which your mind has no control.

I have not room here to explain how these tender, tiny nerves control and operate the stomach. How worry breaks them down and causes indigestion. How misuse wears them out and causes dyspepsia. How neglect may bring on kidney, heart and other troubles through sympathy. I have not room to explain how these nerves may be reached and strengthened and vitalized and made stronger by a remedy I spent years in perfecting—now known by physicians and druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative (Tablets or Liquid.) I have not room to explain how this remedy, by removing the cause, usually puts a certain end to indigestion, belching, heartburn, insomnia, nervousness, dyspepsia. All of these things are fully explained in the book I will send you free when you write. Do not fail to send for the book. It tells how the solar plexus governs digestion and a hundred other things every one ought to know—for all of us, at some time or other, have indigestion. With the book I will send free my "Health Token," an intended passport to good health.

For the free book, and the "Health Token," you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 7970, Racine, Wis. State which book you want.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For The Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four to five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin diseases as this remedy."

At any rate, people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers,' will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

HEALTH NOTICE

THE CONSUMPTIVE'S ROOM.

Remove Dust, Dirt and Germs.

A duster, particularly that potent distributor of germs, the feather duster, should never be used in the room occupied by a consumptive.

Dust, dirt and germs are best removed from the floor by first sweeping with a cloth-covered broom moistened with a dilution of one part Platt's Chlorides and ten parts of water. The furniture and woodwork should be dusted with a cloth dampened with the same dilution. The cuspidor should be washed out daily with boiling water and a dilution of one part Platt's Chlorides and four of water kept constantly in it to receive the sputum. The patient's clothing should be kept by itself, and thoroughly boiled when washed.

Platt's Chlorides is an odorless, colorless liquid disinfectant which instantly removes any foul odors and destroys disease-breeding matter. A quart bottle will last an average family a month and it can be obtained at all druggists.

VANDALS STRIP POPPY BEDS.

FIELDS ARE DESPOILED ABOUT PASADENA.

Pluck the Blooms Carelessly and Sell Them for a Few Cents a Bunch While the Plants Wither and Die—"Doc" Howton, the Spook, Mixed on His Dates.

PASADENA, Office of The Times, 25 South Raymond avenue, Feb. 17. The seeding of the poppy fields is going on at such a rate as to cause resentful comment from those who in years past viewed the yellow carpets that those have spread on the fields north of town.

Blossoms are being plucked at a great rate. Boys about town pick carelessly so that in many instances the plants themselves are destroyed. The blossoms are sold for a cent a bunch about town.

The work done by the Pacific Electric Company in seeding the between the tracks on its lines out of this city is being undone to an alarming extent. The plants from seed procured in Europe and sown in the ground are being ruined by the unthinking vandals.

SPOOK MIXES DATES.

"Doc" Howton of Los Angeles came last night loaded and primed for speech. He had his head crammed with a lot of things he was going to tell about the country going to the bad and how by adopting his beautiful policy of government it might be preserved from destruction.

When he arrived in Pasadena there was no committee to receive him and the hall in which he was to let his rant loose was only lighted in part. There was a dance going on there and the dancers did not care to listen to his sayings.

The spook had mixed his dates. The lecture was to be next Saturday night.

SUPERVISOR BUYS HOME.

POMONA, Feb. 17.—"Thorny croft" the suburban home of George F. Ferris and family and Mrs. Thomas S. Wood, on Cucamonga avenue, has been sold by the owners to Supervisor J. T. Brady, whom it is understood has made the purchase for a relative. The property is one of the finest in this locality and consists of twenty acres in full bearing navel orange trees and an artistic house and outbuildings. The former owners have lived there for fifteen years. The consideration is not stated.

Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Green entertained a company of friends last night at their home on North Garey avenue, in honor of Mrs. B. F. Robinson of Sacramento, and Mrs. Guy F. Morton of Los Angeles.

A daughter was born this morning to the wife of Monroe Seagoe.

Dr. J. M. Lindley sold today to Rev. H. L. Hoyt through the agency of E. E. Gillen a five-acre orange grove on Alexander avenue for $2800. Mr. Hoyt buys as an investment.

GLENDALE.

BUYS FOR SUBDIVISION.

GLENDALE, Feb. 16.—The Valencia orange grove lying just east of Glendale, between Fourth and Fifth streets, was purchased February 14 by F. W. McIntyre, a local real estate dealer, from Mrs. Miner. It is one of the most valuable pieces of property in Glendale. Mr. McIntyre will subdivide his purchase in the near future and place it on the market. The elevation of this land is quite high and therefore commands a fine view of the valley.

GLENDALE GLEANINGS.

The Literary Society of the Glendale High School has been revived and a programme of interest will soon be given.

The girls' basketball team of the Glendale High School journeyed to Whittier Thursday and defeated the girls of that place by a score of 30 to 15. Glendale's lineup was: Lucile Pettmann, Capt., F.; Alta Stone, F.; Emily Smalley, C.; Alma Stone, G.; "Bab" Valentine, G. Referee, Fanset; umpire, Blanch Davenport.

The Los Angeles Polytechnic and Glendale High Schools will meet Saturday in the opening game of the girls' basketball league.

W.C.T.U. ENTERTAINS.

BURBANK, Feb. 17.—A pleasant social was given Thursday evening in I.O.T. Hall by the W.C.T.U. of the Methodist Church. A programme was given which was enjoyed by a large audience. Mrs. Dr. Lightner, a temperance speaker, told of the harm done by the use of Jamaica ginger which she said contains a great deal of alcohol.

REAL ESTATE NOTES.

& Company and J. A. Bowden purchased thirty-eight acres located corner Jefferson and avenue, which they will immediately subdivide and place on the market. They propose to make the improvements, including oiled cement walks and curbs, pipe and plant shade trees to each lot. There will be an alley to each lot. Suitable building restrictions will be a feature. This property is very level and from it a view of the mountains can be had. This section of the city is building up rapidly as will be noted from the large number of new houses going up. The Arlington and Fourth Avenue tract that these people placed on the market a short time ago is all sold, showing a good demand for property in that locality.

Frank L. Hubbard, who has for years been conducting a general business, has recently engaged offices in the Laughlin Building and established a real estate department in connection with his other business. He will make a specialty of business property. Mr. A. L. who is well known in real estate circles, will be associated with Hubbard as manager of the new department.

Rubenstein has sold his interest in the Kings River Land Company and has opened offices at 521 H. W. Hellman building. Mr. Rubenstein will handle Lake Tulare lands.

Grider & Hamilton announce the opening of Vernon Park for next Monday, February 19. It will be recalled that in 1902 Grider & Dow placed on the market the Briswalter, Central and Adams Street tracts, which marked the opening of what is the Vernon of today. In 1903, Vernon Park, between Compton avenue, Central avenue and Fifty-first street was sold out by Grider & Hamilton. Vernondale lies between Fifty-third and Fifty-seventh streets and between Fortuna streets and Compton avenue. It consists of 200 lots, of which forty have been sold in advance of the opening day. All lines of the Pacific Electric system going south pass within one block. There is more acreage to be had in this section for the proportionate price Grider & Hamilton ask for these lots. Robert O. McClure recently sold three acres three blocks distant from Vernondale for $66,000.

Livingston & McGonigle report sales: Forty-feet on East Seventh street for J. B. Lees to W. W. consideration, $8000; Mrs. A. to L. N. Peterson three lots in tract for $1500; N. Sheets lot on Sacramento street, to Philip O'Brien, East Eleventh street, $1900; R. to N. Bouche, five-room in the Cement sub. $2000.

tract between Los Angeles and Redondo Beach, and fronting the electric railway has been placed on the market by E. L. Hopper & Son, and the opening day is set for February 22. This tract will appeal to those who desire moderate priced homes on the "Easy Payment" plan. It contains a park dedicated to the public, and two lots have been set aside for schoolhouse purposes. The streets are eighty feet wide. It is the intention of the owners to build up a home community for home owners, and to this end, ten lots will be given free of cost to the first ten who build homes.

H. Wilson & Co. report the organization of a syndicate known as the Land and Development Company. This syndicate is made up of capital men of California and Illinois. The company has bought 650 acres east of and adjoining Chino. The soil is adapted for English walnuts and the company propose to develop water and plant the acreage to walnuts and alfalfa, or if the investor prefers the raw land will be sold at so much an acre, and the buyer can develop as he sees fit. The property will be sold in tracts of ten acres and up.

A townsite on the line of the railroad between Los Angeles and Anaheim is the object of a deal made this week in the purchase by C. E. Flint of the Commercial Bank, W. H. Rice of Illinois, J. L. Starr, State Dairy Inspector and R. E. Ibbetson & Co. They say it is their purpose to make this a desirable suburb. They have arranged for grocery, hardware and merchandise stores together with a lumber yard and have parties talking of locating a bank at this point. Plots will also be reserved for school, church and park purposes. It is the company's plan to have an opening shortly and sell business and residence lots together with acreage from one to ten acre plots. It is between Anaheim and Metzger. The lots are 54x150 feet.

The Jones & Ryder Land Company during the past year have secured a large tract of land between Washinging street and the Sixteenth-street car line about half way between Los Angeles and Venice, and are now engaged in improving it with first class street work, shade trees and water piped under good pressure. Good restrictions will be enforced, and one of need in subdivisions is supplied by a fine new modern graded school, employing a corps of three teachers at the present time.

Euclid Crest, the handsome new subdivision of fifty-four lots at the northwest corner of Euclid and Stephenson avenues which has just been placed on market by Edward D. Silent & Co., seems to be moving quite rapidly in spite of the rainy weather and the resultant delay in street work on the tract. Sales reported this week mostly to real estate dealers are a lot $800 to George A. Flanders; one for $800 to Ella W. Hildebrandt; one for $750 to Mrs. Jean Martin one for $750 to E. P. Harrison; one for $1000 to Joseph Wilson; one for $2000 to Samuel Waktor; one for $1000 to Anna Gregg.

ANOTHER LARGE BUILDING.

A six-story fireproof store and apartment hotel building is being erected by the Royal Building Company. The Royal apartments will be, it is said, absolutely fireproof. The building will cost in the neighborhood of $250,000, and will be at Ninth and Figueroa streets. It will be six stories and basement, built of pressed brick, steel, tile and concrete, and will contain stores, café, hotel office, lobby, reception parlor, billiard hall, den, roof garden and sun parlor. Train & Williams, the architects, are said to have introduced into the plans for this building several novel and highly commendable features. The arrangement of the apartments is perfect. The rooms will be large, airy and light.

IN OUTSIDE TOWNS.

E. A. Stobbs has bought of W. G. Tower his two-story six-room house and one lot on West Sixth street, same town, near the boulevard; price named $1000.

The residence of George W. Griffiths, Jr., on Center and Citrus, Covina, has been sold to H. M. Houser for $7500. The purchaser is head of the firm of Houser Bros., fruit packers. Dr. J. D. Reed, a local physician, purchased the Reynolds residence on East Badillo street, last night, for a price said to be $5500. A Pasadena man has purchased 100 feet frontage on Citrus avenue, north of the First National Bank for $5000.

SHERIFF SWEARS OFF.

EBENSVURG (Pa.) Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Sheriff John Lenhart, who yesterday swung into eternity Jacob Hauser and Stephen Fellows, wife murderers, today declared that the practice of hanging is "damnable," and that he is done with it forever. The execution was a sickening one, as it took Hauser ten mniutes to strangle to death.

"The work is damnable," said Lenhart, "and I am done with it forever. I never realized until yesterday, when I looked at the mob who had come to see these men die, how near the beast a man is. Nothing fine or clean or strong has any business at a hanging. It outrages every decent sentiment a man has, and Sheriff as I am and sworn to carry out the law, I will never again be instrumental in taking the life of one of my fellow-men."

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

Few People Know How Useful It Is In Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion; it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered willow charcoal and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Wealthy Woman of Boston Cannot be Extradited to Italy for Securing Painting.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Henry W. Swift, counsel for Mrs. Jack Gardner, ridicules the story cabled from Italy that an attempt would be made by the Italian government to extradite Mrs. Gardner in connection with the alleged illegal sale of the famous Giorgions "Christ Bearing the Cross," now in Mrs. Gardner's Fenway palace.

"Mrs. Gardner purchased the Giorgion in good faith," says Mr. Swift. "The proposed court proceedings in Italy do not cause us the least alarm. The seller of the picture may be prosecuted and punished, but not the buyer. There is no danger of Mrs. Gardner being extradited." Mrs. Gardner paid $50,000 for the painting about six years ago, and it is now with her other art treasures in the Fenway Museum. She has repeatedly declined, however, to state who sold her the painting.

SWIFT WAS MARRIED.

Letter Just Discovered Clears up the Mystery About Wedding of the Famous Cynic.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The discovery of an unpublished letter in the library of Christ Church, Oxford, clears up the literary mystery of Dean Swift's relations with "Stella." The letter was written by Rev. Evans, bishop of Meath, to Archbishop Wake, and is dated July 27, 1723. The bishop writes:

"There was a reported promise of marriage between a young woman named Miss Van Omrig and the dean. She designed to give him all her fortune, which was about £5000, but on discovering that Dean had already been married to Mrs. Johnson, daughter of Sir William Temple, she became indignant and made a new will."

The letter corroborates in detail the information as to Stella's announcement of her marriage and her wish that the correspondence with Dean Swift should be published, a request with which her executors refused to comply. Altogether, the letter makes the evidence of Dean Swift's marriage too strong to resist.

COPPER COMPANY PROSPEROUS.

BOSTON, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Arizona Copper Company for the year ending September 30, 1905 showed, after carrying to reserve $250,000 for redemption of debt, replacement of capital outlay, etc., a surplus after dividends of $7935 against deficit of $22,880 the preceding year; a deficit of $4985 in 1902-3 and a surplus of $7250 in 1901-2. The total surplus now stands at $58,365.

PRETENDER TO PROTEST.

ROME, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is officially announced that Don Jaime de Bourbon, son of Don Carlos and pretender to the throne of Spain, will soon visit the Pope to make a platonic protest against the marriage of King Alfonso with a princess of a Protestant family.

The two main living rooms are 11.6x15.6 and 12x14.6 in size, and each is equipped with the MARSHALL & STEARNS COMPANY'S PATENTED WALL BEDS and BOOKCASE AND WRITING DESK DOOR. The rear room is also equipped with OUR PATENTED DINING TABLE and GAS RANGE ON SWINGING DOOR.

Thus in the front room you have a parlor and bedroom. In the rear room you have a living room, dining-room and bedroom, which, in addition to the kitchen, gives you in reality SIX ROOMS besides the bath and screen porch.

In addition to the increased number of rooms obtained by OUR PATENTED FIXTURES, your rooms are made more attractive by the large console glass or mantel piece which are the fronts of our PATENTED WALL BEDS, the BOOKCASE, the WRITING DESK, the CENTER TABLE and the convenience of the SWINGING DOOR and GAS RANGE. All these go to make a more attractive and convenient cottage for the tenant, who in turn is willing to pay a higher rental than for a cottage built under the old plan.

These cottages occupy exactly 42x36 feet of ground space, and on a fifty-foot lot allow for a grass plot on both sides and along the front, thus adding beauty and attractiveness to their surroundings. They can bebuilt for 33 per cent. LESS than a five-room cottage of the ordinary kind, and will rent for 100 per cent. more per month than will the ordinary cottage of five rooms.

In cottage construction, as well as Apartment Houses and Hotels, our PATENTED WALL BEDS AND FIXTURES are used to the same advantage and saving to the owner and investor. THEY ECONOMIZE SPACE and make possible the erection of cottages with twice the number of rooms over the old plan of building, and they will COMMAND and EARN AN INCOME OF AT LEAST 25 PER CENT. MORE.

To every one interested in the building of cottages, either for homes or rental purposes, we have prepared a little descriptive circular on the double cottage as illustrated above. These contain figures and much descriptive matter relative to the building and equipment, which will prove of much value. It will be mailed free upon request to any address. In addition to this you should also send for a copy of which illustrates and describes in detail our PATENTED WALL BEDS AND FIXTURES. In this there are many facts and much food for thought in connection with buildings of all kinds for living purposes. Hotel owners, managers, capitalists, architects, contractors and builders, and builders of and investors in Apartment Houses, Hotels, Homes and Cottages, should send for a copy and study its contents. It tells you how to best construct your building for your tenants as well as yourselves. It tells you how to reduce the cost of construction and how to increase the income from 25 per cent. to 33 1-3 per cent. IT IS MAILED FREE UPON REQUEST. SEND FOR A COPY TODAY.

Bank clearings yesterday were heavy at $1,935,352.97, nearly $700,000 increase over the corresponding day last year and nearly $1,100,000 over two years ago. For the week the clearings were more than $11,250,000 this year, compared with a little over $8,250,000 last year, and less than $6,000,000 the year before.

The bank statement in New York yesterday was less unfavorable than had been anticipated from the fact that the banks lost heavily during the week to the sub-treasury, the total loss being about $3,500,000; yet the statement was nearly as good as upon the previous Saturday. This was brought about by heavy curtailments amounting to nearly $10,000,000 in the loan limit. The decrease in deposits was over $12,000,000, but it left a surplus reserve of over $5,000,000.

The feeling in the cotton markets on both sides of the water manifested a little more confidence in the future. Some brokers prophesy a better market for this staple in the future, than has prevailed in the past.

The stock markets were all dull and weak, and there are intimations more or less numerous current, that the big operators have quietly got from under the speculative market. The tone seemed to be lacking in confidence.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Produce of all kinds sold briskly yesterday morning, but prices were weak on most commodities. The unfavorable weather during the past week kept traffic at standstill for several days, but yesterday the bright and sunny weather instilled more life into the demand for produce and the general market displayed an active appearance.

Fresh local ranch eggs were in better demand yesterday and the market recovered somewhat from the easiness of the preceding day. The official price of fresh offerings was advanced to 18 cents a dozen. One conservative egg jobber said yesterday that the damp weather had a tendency to keep eggs from going into cold storage, while they were being quoted at 17 cents, but should the decline occur during warm, fair weather, that all the surplus would be diverted into storage.

The butter market continued easy yesterday, under the decline of last Wednesday. Trade was moderate and the receipts continued heavy. Jobbers of butter were operating with considerable caution, and in most instances held their orders down to limited parcels for absolute requirements. The cheese market was easy or steady in spots, according to the stocks on hand. Some houses had more than their trade immediately required, and others were short. California anchor cheese was quoted at 16½; Young America at 17½, and hand cheese, 18.

Clear, warm weather and extra buying for Sunday wants stimulated local trade in fresh fruits yesterday. Oranges were as last quoted, with limited supplies and large sizes holding firm at full figures under continued active demand, while mediums and smaller offerings were easy because of heavy holdings and a general disposition to urge sales. Similar conditions were reported in grape fruit. Apples remained precisely as last quoted.

Onions sold slowly and the market was top-heavy, with prevailing prices easy, the minimum figure being extreme for the fanciest grades. The market for prime quality potatoes ruled firm at full previous prices, but under sluggish sale the market continued weak on the cheaper grades. Receipts of vegetables were fair, and the following change in prices took place: Tomatoes, 75 to $1.25; cabbage, 40 to 60; lettuce, 10 to 20.

All large fish were plentiful, but small fish and wild game were scarce.

Transactions on the exchange yesterday were as follows: Twenty-five cases of local ranch eggs, fifty sacks of Australian brown onions, twenty-five sacks of No. 1 Lady Washington beans.

The receipts of produce as reported at yesterday's exchange were as follows: Eggs, 421 cases; butter, 12,705 lbs.; cheese, 3740 lbs.; potatoes, 1100 sacks; onions, none; beans, none; sweet potatoes, 3 sacks.

NEW YORK MARKETS.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—Severe declines resulted from the active trading of the two-hours session today. The selling was made up of heavy speculative liquidation combined with a well centered attack on the market which was credited to the generalship of a veteran professional operator with the prestige of many bear campaigns in the past. The moment evidently was propitious for the attack. The renewed decline of this week had brought prices back to the neighborhood reported in the decline in January. A fall below this level was bound to have the effect of dislodging speculative holdings which were retained throughout that decline. The bank statement proved more favorable than had been expected. Only a nominal inroad was made on the surplus, which it was feared might be wiped out. Loss in cash was only about half of what was indicated by the known movements of money for the week. The principal interest attached to the loan item and the contraction reported of $9,616,600 was in contrast with the fears that the heavy bond flotations of the week must have caused a large expansion of banking credits. That there has been, in fact, such an expansion is not open to doubt, but by resort to foreign lenders through the medium of the exchange market the local banks seem to have been relieved for the present from these requires. The statement of the country's foreign trade for January published today shows the large resources at command in the foreign exchange market in the excess value of exports over imports of $64,000,000 compared with only about $25,000,000 for the preceding January. The severest pressure today centered naturally upon the recent speculative favorites, so that the widest declines are found in Reading, Union Pacific, smelting, Colorado Fuel, Amalgamated Copper, the Hill Group, Brooklyn Transit and others which have been more or less prominent in the excessive speculation of late. The decline in prices, however, was general throughout the list to the extent of between 1 and 2 points. The feverish rallies at the last evidently were due to hasty profit taking by the successful bears, and the closing tone was unsettled and weak. Total sales of bonds, par value $1,390,000.

GENERAL EASTERN MARKETS.

GRAIN, PRODUCE, PROVISIONS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Feb. 17.—For the third successive day the wheat market was dominated by the bears, and, as on the preceding days, prices yielded materially. At the opening May was off ⅛ to ⅜ at 82⅞ to 83½. Pit traders were the principal sellers during the first half of the session, cables were weak, weather in the United States favorable and a forecast of the world's shipments for the week showed a liberal movement. In addition a report was received from India stating that several of the drought-stricken districts had been visited by rain. Toward the end of the first hour the market became somewhat firmer because of covering by shorts. The market closed weak, however, with prices near the lowest point of the day, final quotations on May being ⅞ lower at 82⅝.

Despite the weakness of wheat steadiness was shown by the corn market. May closed ⅛ lower at 42⅝.

Oats were firm early, but closed easy, May at 29½.

The provision market was strong because of a 10-cent advance in the price of live hogs and a large increase in shipments of meat and lard. At the close May pork was 25@27½ higher, ribs were 7½ and lard was off a shade. The close was weak with May off ⅞, at 82⅝. Close: Wheat, May, 82⅝; July, 81½. Corn, May, 42⅝; July, 43¼. SAN FRANCISCO MARKETS.

FRUIT, GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] There was little life in the market for oranges today, wet weather hampering the demand to some extent, but with receipts light and available supplies, especially of favored sizes, 96s to 126s, moderate, the general undertone held steady at prevailing rates. With strong advices coming to hand from the South, reporting a buoyant demand from the Atlantic seaboard points, local operators anticipate light receipts for some days to come and show no disposition to urge sales, expecting a firmer tone to develop. Common lemons continued plentiful and cheap, but upper grades held steady at top rates. Limes were firm and in good request and values for other citrus fruits were without change, holding steady under moderately active demand. Potatoes were without new feature today, prime grades holding steady at top rates, under fair demand for local needs, while heavy offerings of low-quality stock continued easy at uneven prices. The market for onions continued topheavy and little stock was held above 95c a cental. Asparagus arrived freely and under brisk demand was quickly absorbed at sustained prices. Fancy rhubarb was a point higher, but plenty of ordinary southern stock was to be had at inside quotations. Arrivals of peas from the south were mostly in poor condition, being wet and rain-soaked, and sales were slow at quoted figures. Fancy dry stock could have easily brought 7 cents. Mexican tomatoes sold at a sharp advance over southern kinds and found a ready market at established rates.

San Francisco Dairy Market.

SHOOTS WIFE'S DARK ADMIRER.

NEGROES IN DEADLY AFFRAY ON THIRD STREET.

Aggrieved Husband, Seeing His Spouse in Company With Another Man, Expostulates and Fight Follows Which Will Probably Prove Fatal—Officers Make Quick Arrests.

In a quarrel which followed Henry Wilkeson's refusal to stop paying attention to Mrs. Logan Lee, the husband of the latter shot Wilkeson twice in the street near the corner of Third and Anderson streets, just after midnight, this morning.

Patrolmen Glenn and Randolph happened to be in the Hotel Canadian on the corner of Hewitt and Anderson streets when the shooting occurred and immediately ran the block to the scene of the trouble and captured all concerned, including the woman, before any had a chance to escape. All of the participants in the fight are colored.

According to the story of eye witnesses to the fray, Wilkeson had met Mrs. Lee on the street and was walking toward the Canadian Hotel with the woman. As he had paid her a great deal of attention and caused considerable trouble between Lee and his wife and, it is said, had caused them to separate, Lee stepped up and expostulated with the woman, whereupon Wilkeson struck him.

Instantly Lee whipped out a revolver and shot, the ball striking Wilkeson in the stomach, inflicting a probably fatal wound. It did not weaken him for a moment, however, and he sprang at Lee with a knife in his hand. The two men struggled and fell to the ground where Lee, who is much the smaller of the two, again fired at Wilkeson, the ball just grazing the latter's head on the right side.

Just as the officers came up Lee gained his feet and started to run, but Officer Glenn overhauled him in short order. The revolver used by Lee was an antiquated 38-caliber firearm and when the trouble began it had just two cartridges in it. Both of these were discharged in the fight.

The two men and the woman were locked up in the City Jail with a charge of assault to commit murder placed against Lee, and of suspicion against his wife. The police surgeons did not expect Wilkeson to last through the night.

Wilkeson is well known to the police as a worthless and bad man. He had served a number of terms in the City Jail for various charges. Lee is a railroad man and is said to work pretty steadily.

STUDENTS FIGHT WITH FOILS.

Young Frenchmen of University of Pennsylvania Settle Dispute on Field.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 17.—Two students at the University of Pennsylvania fought a duel on Franklin field with half-inch point foils to settle a dispute which occurred in the classroom. The principals were George E. Milet Beltrami and Clataire Mari Boudj, both of Paris, France. The two men are members of the senior class of the University Dental School.

The meeting was witnessed by thirty-five students. Pierce Kean Rousset, another French student, acted as referee.

The bout lasted for fifteen minutes. Toward the end of the affair Boudy, who did the most damage, and who was the only one to bring blood, slashed Beltrami's sword forearm, inflicting a gash about four inches long. The referee, however, awarded the bout to Beltrami, inasmuch as he had made the first three touches upon his opponent's body.

The Mammoth Shoe House

519 South Broadway.

To Inaugurate a Week At Biggest Bargains in Shoes

Beginning tomorrow there will be inaugurated a series of special values each day of the entire week. The Mammoth Shoe House liberality in bargain giving is notable all over this part of California. The limit of factory cost does not stop this busy store when it has some object to accomplish by making special prices. For instance, the $1.50 value of last week will be continued, and which places $3 men's and women's shoes on sale at that price. You will find new lots this week at the $1.50 price—all the modern styles. The next particularly interesting bargain is the $1.95 line, which gives choice in men's or women's shoes that sold up to as high as $4. Patent leathers, vici kid, in heavy or light soles. Snappiest present-day styles. In men's there are a few of those Burt & Packard "Correct Shape" patent leathers—regular $3.50 and $4.00 advertised shoes. In girls' and boys' shoes there will be no end to the bargains; all the sizes and natty styles. One big snap is the 98c line, which represents $2 values.

CARTER SCANDAL AIRED.

SAVANNAH, Feb. 17.—E. R. Conant, who was assistant engineer under Capt. O. M. Carter, occupied the stand nearly the whole day during the Greene and Gaynor trial giving testimony tending principally to show the difference between the work done by Greene and Gaynor and that done by A. J. Twiggs. Twiggs, it is asserted by the District Attorney, had secured a contract for the improvement of Savannah River at Augusta, being the only man who had underbid Greene and Gaynor or those really representing the defendants during a term of several years. Carter, the prosecution alleged, made it so warm for Twiggs that he was forced to give up the contract at a loss, Carter completing it by hired labor and charging the cost against Twiggs' bond.

A Report Full of Figures.

The Annual Report of the SAN LUIS MINING COMPANY has just been published and we shall be glad to send a copy to anyone interested. The report shows the following:

Total cash investment of the company in Mexico—in addition to the property to exploit which it was organized (reduced to United States money)	$1,022,425.66
Product during the year 1905 (U. S. money)	750,943.60
Net profits for year 1903 (U. S. money)	41,824.10
Net profits for year 1905 (U. S. money)	138,765.48

During the year 1905 the Company produced 30,725 96-100 tons of ore, of which it had left on hand January 1, 1906, 3290 64-100 tons. Of this amount 29,391 43-100 tons were produced by the three mines, San Luis, Potosina and San Lucas. During the present year the additional development work already done will enable the product of the Potosina to be more than doubled. In the San Luis Mine the Company has more than 200,000 tons of ore in one block marked out and ready to take down as soon as the concentrating plant that is now being erected is ready to work it. During the year also the San Pablo, San Gonzalo, Castellana, Malinche, Sydney and Aventura will also be opened up and their ores will be added to the total production. There are already 20,000 tons of ore in the San Gonzalo that will average $30 a ton, blocked out and ready to take down, and the San Gonzalo and Castellana will by next July be the Company's largest producers. In the two mines alone (which are on the same vein) there is estimated to be enough ore to pay the Company's entire capitalization in dividends during the next five years without materially diminishing the supply.

By the end of the year 1906 several other of the Company's mines will be opened so as to produce in 1907.

The report shows that the Company has altogether 64 mines, covering an area of 205.9 pertenencias, or 1341.44 acres, of which 180.9 pertenencias, or 393.27 acres, were acquired in 1905.

The mines are situated in what is pronounced to be one of the best mineralized districts in the world, and constitute by far the largest and most important holdings in the district. The Company is now the largest shipper of ore in the State of Durango, and its ores rank well with any produced in Mexico and are eagerly sought for by ore buyers. They are copper, but have enough gold and silver in them to pay the entire cost of production, leaving the copper as a by-product, costing nothing.

The total development work (underground) on the Company's properties up to December 31, 1905, was as follows:

Shafts	1983 feet
Winzes and raises	3949 feet
Drifts, tunnels and crosscuts	11382 feet
Total	17314 feet

Of this the following was done during 1905:

Shafts	540 feet
Winzes and raises	1251 feet
Drifts, tunnels and crosscuts	4834 feet
Total	6625 feet

The Company is paying dividends this year at the rate of 6 per cent., and next year with more mines in operation, it expects to pay at the rate of 12 per cent. After next year the dividends can increase steadily as the development work goes on. It is estimated that fifty years at least will be required to work out the ore bodies already uncovered and that then the mines will by no means be exhausted.

To provide funds for building a railroad to the mines and a power plant at the mines and other improvements which will largely increase the earnings and dividends the Company has recently increased its capital from 25,000 shares to 200,000 shares of the par value of $10 each, and the stock is now offered for subscription at par.

BLOCK RECORD SYSTEM.

New York Commissioner, Here on Visit, Will Explain Australian Plan of Certifying to Titles.

Maj. Thomas D. Mosscrop, Superintendent-Commissioner of Records of Kings county, N. Y., who has been instrumental in the recent introduction of the Australian or Block system of recording deeds and mortgages, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday morning accompanied by his cousin and niece.

Mr. Mosscrop said last night that he would endeavor to have an interview with County Recorder Calvin Hartwell and explain the workings of the new system.

"The Block system," said Mr. Mosscrop, "is eventually planned to succeed the numerous guarantee and title companies inasmuch as it will enable the county to certify to the title of every inch of property within its borders. By this system every block or real estate will be treated as an entire county and at a glance the perfection of the title to any piece of property is shown. In view of the trouble I understand to be incident to securing perfect title to property in Los Angeles owing to the ancient Pueblo ownership, this system may be of interest to the county and city authorities."

YOEMEN GATHER TO WELCOME.

A number of the members of Los Angeles Homestead No. 947, American Yeoman, gathered at No. 175 North Spring street last night to welcome H. A. Miller of San Francisco, Pacific Coast manager of the order. After a short talk on the merits of the society, dancing was the order of the evening.

TICKETS ALL OUT.

There are no more to be supplied, and since the limit of seats is reached, the committee in charge has all the people it can take care of. This year 600 tickets were sold, going with astonishing rapidity. More people will be present than at any similar function ever given here.

POLICE AWAIT STROKE OF AX.

RILEY AND ONE OTHER REGULAR MAY BE CUT OFF.

Chief Auble Says if Accused Patrolman Does Not Resign Before Tuesday His Dismissal Will be Recommended—Several Special Officers Said to be Shaky.

That his associations with Frank DeWitt and other characters will cost Patrolman M. P. Riley his position on the police force seems practically a certainty. Chief of Police Auble stated yesterday that if Riley did not turn in his resignation before the Police Commission meets on Tuesday the officer's dismissal would be recommended.

The belief is expressed that Riley has a peculiar influence over DeWitt, for when the latter was arrested he told the officers that he and Riley had worked together in extorting money from women. This story was partially verified by one of the women who had paid money to DeWitt, but after DeWitt and Riley were brought together the former changed his story and then told several versions of it, becoming so badly mixed that it would be impossible to make a case on his testimony.

In his story DeWitt said that, when he demanded and received money from Edith Hammond in an East Second-street rooming house, Riley stood outside the door. The woman told the same story to the chief the next day and when confronted with the statement Riley, it is said, did not deny it.

According to stories told by some officers, Riley has associated with persons of questionable character.

Riley is not the only one, however. At least one more officer is slated to go and several special officers will get the ax which is now being sharpened for a cleaning out in the department.

There is less crime in Los Angeles this winter than there has been for a number of years and the department is probably as free from petty grafting by officers as any force in the United States.

Just once in a while an officer gives way to the temptations which beset him and nearly always his superiors learn of his action and he is dismissed. Chief Auble is aiming to make the Los Angeles department the best in the country. He will stand for no crooked work.

There is some anxiety in the department as to just where the ax is to fall but as a general thing the men are not worrying. The changes to be made in the department on Tuesday will not be far-reaching and probably none of the old men will be touched at all. But several changes are coming.

PENFIELD WEDDING.

A marriage in which the Chamber of Commerce people were very much interested took place yesterday afternoon quite privately at St. John's Church, Rev. Henderson Judd officiating. The bride was Miss J. H. Penfield, who, singularly enough, married a man having not only her name but her initials—J. H. Penfield, of Harrisburg, Pa. Mr. Penfield is a distant relative of his bride. In a short time Mr. and Mrs. Penfield will move to the Pennsylvania home of the groom. Mrs. Penfield is a well-remembered kindergarten teacher in the local schools, and was a valuable exhibition assistant of Secretary Wiggins during the busy times of this summer.

ROYAL COURT INITIATES.

Assembly No. 1, Royal Court, initiated a large class of candidates on Friday evening in Symphony Hall. Gen. Frank C. Prescott, Past Royal Chancellor, and Sam J. Chappel, Royal Chancellor, were present and made addresses. Arrangements were completed for the open meeting to be held March 2. An assembly of the order will be instituted at Pasadena on Tuesday evening, and the local assembly has chartered the parlor car "Poppy," for its use. The assembly will attend the institution of the new lodge in a body.

FROM EIGHT CITIES HAS HENRY P. BARBOUR FLED.

Leapfrog History of the Spendthrift Promoter One Long Succession of Big Schemes Abandoned and Sudden Escapes from Debt.

A fool there was and he made his prayer
(Even as you and I!)
To a rag and a bone and a hank of hair
(We called her a woman who did not care)
But the fool he called her his lady fair
(Even as you and I!)

Oh, the years we waste and the tears we waste
And the work of our head and hand,
Belong to the woman who did not know
(And now we know that she never could know)
And did not understand.

A fool there was and his goods he spent
(Even as you and I!)
Honor and faith and a sure intent
(And it wasn't the least what the lady meant)
But a fool must follow his natural bent
(Even as you and I!)

Oh the toil we lost and the spoil we lost
And the excellent things we planned,
Belong to the woman who did not know why
(And now we know that she never knew why)
And did not understand.

The fool was stripped to his foolish hide
(Even as you and I!)
Which she might have seen when she cast him aside
(But it isn't on record the lady tried)
So some of him lived but most of him died—
(Even as you and I!)

And it isn't the shame and it isn't the blame
That stings like a white hot brand—
It's coming to know that she never knew why
(Seeing at last she could never know why)
And never could understand.

—[Rudyard Kipling.

CHAPTER I.

BECOMING A PROMOTER.

A year and half a century ago Henry P. Barbour was born in Massachusetts, the State which found diversion in burning both witches and Addicks gas. One person in Los Angeles knows about his early life—his wife, and she will not talk. He worked his way through Amherst and is said to have graduated with honors in the class of '78. Parental poverty must have moved him to this early display of self-reliance, for his after-life reveals no trait of courting inconvenience for hardship's sake. Twenty-two saw him graduated from the Boston Law School with moderate distinction among his fellows; and then for a year or more he experimented with his legal weapons in and about the Hub. There is no record that he more than tried their edge with his wetted thumb.

Law, to a young man of tastes which eventually should lead him into $200,000 of personal debts and half a dozen insolvencies, was petty, irksome; a something well enough to have acquired in the course of preliminary education but not by any means to be clung to with game o' the world in sight. Promotion was the thing.

A quarter of a century ago that fine art, it may be said, was emerging from the clay and just beginning to take on the polish of accustomedness; science and culture were evolving with infinite adjustment and admirable skill that chef d' oeuvre of human industry, the Promoter. Real specimens were few to find. The golden genius of persuasion was old as the race itself and possessed by thousands, but its adaptation as a sole tool of business was a new departure. Young Barbour saw the point.

Before his twenty-fifth birthday he had forsaken the law, successfully promoted a railway scheme in the New England metropolis, made $100,000 in six months, and lost every penny of it within the ensuing twelve. At 25 he was a confirmed plunger and a hopeless spendthrift, a man of luxury and the world.

CHAPTER II.

THE EAST AND THE WEST.

Boston had been to him a training school. New York should be his workshop. Moreover, it is hard to avoid one's creditors in the Back Bay town when they are many, for its streets are narrow and its remembrances long. So he burned his bills and flecked their tiresome ashes from his boots and one foggy night slipped out unseen to Gotham.

If the odor of those first bad debts worried his own nostrils it was not for long. No man can be a successful promoter and smell backward. His feet must not be fagged with disagreeable bygones—and with Barbour a debt became in all conscience a bygone when its progenitor had moved his camp to farther fields. Whoso should rise up and essa yto follow him was a wraith from the past, and shall the genius of promotion take heed of wraiths?

The noisiest city in America received Barbour, as it receives all unknown at first, coldly. In Boston the youth who could coin a hundred thousand from his brain in a sixmonth and boldly lose it in a year, was fit to take account of and—watch. In New York he was a pewter pebble in a lake of gold. No amount of diligent dredging for facts has resurrected the transcript of how fate dealt with Henry P. Barbour in the island Sodom of the East, but this much is vouchsafed, that he didn't long stay there and that he came away in haste, distancing a pressure from behind.

"Westward the course of empire takes its way." Promotion is indissolubly bound up in modern empire. Again Barbour saw the point.

"I don't know," says a late acquaintance of the gentleman, "just what they did to him in Chicago, but I know they did it hard and more than once." From which it may be assumed with reason that Mr. Barbour's mistake was not in following the course of empire but in following it not far enough. You do not go gull-snaring with much sagacity in the gutters. You must haunt the virgin edges of the marsh.

A COOLER CLIME.

On the tip of the snout of that walrus-shaped northland lake which is Superior, sits Duluth, many miles toward the Canadian border. It gets cold there in winter as the antipodal hinges of hell. To presume that its comparative proximity to the extradition line wooed Barbour thence might not be warrantable; kindlier to suppose that the warmth generated in certain circles by his late propinquity impelled him to a cooler clime.

Somewhere back in the middle meantime he had married. A lady of estimable character, of Puritan stock and grave rearing, had joined her life with his in holy wedlock. In how many stressful times since that bridal her heart has given ear to vain regrettings none may know and few would be unkind enough to ask. She is giving to him now the last loyalty of a deserted wife, a woman's silence.

Ten thousand dollars a year was the proved earning capacity of Henry P. Barbour as a traveling representative of the Northwest Magazine. That is a periodical published by the Great Northern Railway Company, and Barbour's business was to promote influx of advertising matter to its forms. Still a promoter. For two or three years he traveled up and down the Northwest country, and the records written of him in the books of the greatest railroad genius of the world, James J. Hill, are epitomes of business success.

Yet others had to pay his hotel bills when he came away. You may or may not understand that bar men, cigar men, tailors and haberdashers may be evaded financially by one minded to flight, but that wardrobes are carried in trunks and trunks stay behind when hotel accounts are not squared. It is so.

CHAPTER III.

ARMS OUTSTRETCHED.

Eccentricity, the birthblot of genius; turpitude, the hallmark of skilled promotion—how often true!

Henry F. Barbour turned up in Seattle, his promotive wits honed to a feather edge by his Great Northern experience. The elegant and impressive Bostonian with the air of extreme but dignified busyness and the manor-born way of talking big with directness, walked straight into the outstretched arms of the Queen City and was embraced with respectful warmth. Though—luckily for himself—they had never heard of him, it was in a moment as though the municipal guest-chamber had been aired for Henry P. Barbour in advance. Only his distinguished presence had been lacking to completely assure the future glory of the Sound.

And they're no jays in Seattle, understand.

How, after each successive flight, the man managed to come in on his feet is perplexing. A shrewd guess says that the faithful, stay-at-home wife must have brought into constant play the thrift inbred in her Puritan childhood and so saved by littles while he spent by large. Nor can it be imagined by any who know her that the flimsy structure which did duty as her husmand's principal was ever exposed to her honest gaze. They say he treated her gently. There is no surer way to promote a good woman's faith. And faith asks not to be shown.

FORTUNE DECLINED.

Well, before Barbour's loose change—anything under a thousand was loose change to him—was gone he had the people of Seattle by the ears with a magnificent project—that is the accepted word, not "scheme;" it has the United States brand of adoption on it—to construct a marine basin and lay out a townsite on Gray's Harbor. Never mind the details, he was offered $250,000 cash for his interest in the undertaking before he had been at it a year, and promptly declined. Before he had been at it another year he went dead, flat broke; disappeared between two suns, leaving all his trunks, clothing and—debts. Which had bred like guinea pigs.

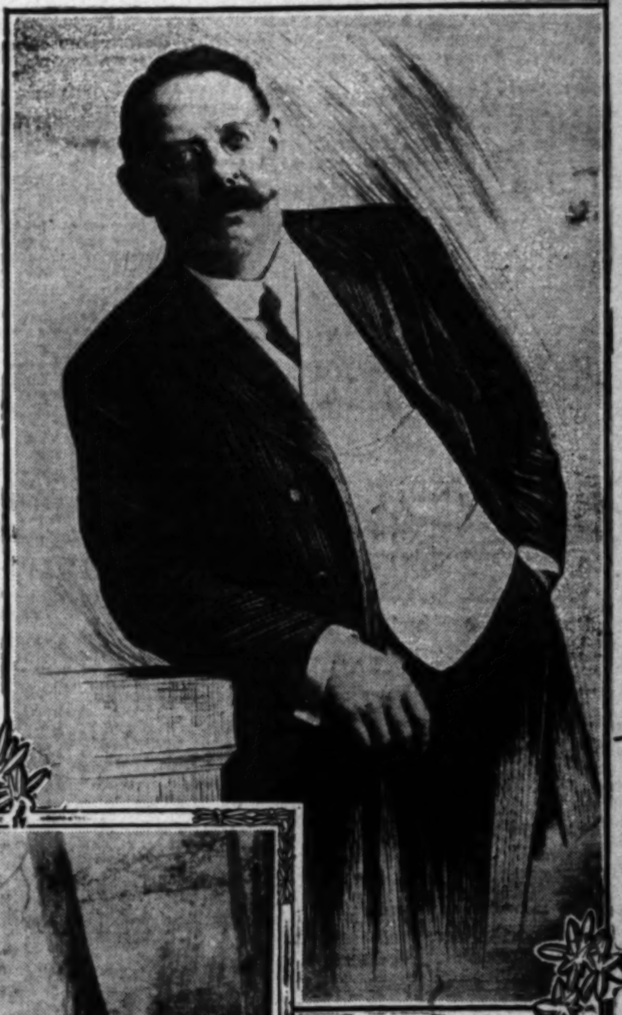
It was Denver next. Mines and water-development projects. Same elegance of manner and magnificence of proposal, same forceful directness in affairs and lavish looseness of small change, everything the same except wardrobe and debts. They were new. The first he brought with him and added to, the second the deeply impressed people of the Colorado metropolis kindly permitted him to acquire. And then, same old story, sudden collapse of schemes (they were not projects, after all,) hurried departure, stunned creditors by the fourscore; new field.

CHAPTER IV.

BESIDE THE SUNDOWN SEA.

It was one mellow winter day four years ago, sun flooding the golden valleys of the Southland, that Henry P. Barbour drifted in to Los Angeles and set up shop, the whence of his coming as unknown as of the soft winds that guided his smooth approach. The crests of the combers at Long Beach were not more whitely immaculate than the starched expanse of waistcoat his pocket-thrust hand exposed. The faint lavender of bygone Beau Brummel could not have been in better taste than the tonsorial evansecence that caressed his shaved chin. Poole in his most captious mood could not have faulted the lines of his dress. That subdued gleam which frowns at polish and halts this side of gloss, mantled his excellent boots. No vulgar glint of gem cheapened his rich atire.

Is it a sort of genius to forehear the padded footfalls of opportunity and, awaiting, seize circumstance by the tail? Some say so. Prescience and preparedness and perseverance, ah, that is Power! But where does honesty come in? God only knows how many thousands of dollars of debts and how many hundreds of defrauded creditors this man Barbour had behind his unprofitable back when he entered Los Angeles that day four years ago. But men do know, and women to their sorrow, that today, hiding somewhere in Old Mexico, he shrinks in squeamish vanity from a mass of obligations acquired since then whose scheduling would fill many columns of small type and whose total is the astounding sum of $400,000!—one-half of which is owed for personal accounts to tradesmen in amounts ranging from $5 to above a thousand!—and one-fourth of which, or $100,000, is borne by creditors in this city!



Henry P. Barbour, the promoter whose flight from Los Angeles revealed deb— of four hundred thousand dollars. The West First-street flat where he maintained his mistress. In the canoe, Miss May Nye, on whom Barbour squandered a fortune.

CHAPTER V.

"TOUCHING" A TERRITORY.

It was soon after opening real estate offices here and before he had entered very prominently into the local business life that Henry P. Barbour decided to take a flyer in Arizona. Whether one of the glittering possibilities that his creative brain was constantly casting into paper accomplishment caught his speculative eye, or whether an infirmity of immediate cash impelled him, is inconsequential; he went suddenly away, leaving his Los Angeles business in care.

Williams, A. T., first in sagebrush land beheld the effulgence of his front. Dandyism marks itself for swift slaughter at the hands of the tenderfoot-extinguishers down Williams way, but nowhere in the dust-hung realm of the bucking broncs would a man of Barbour's twenty-carat equipment secure a more respectful hearing. The news soon sifted about, as news ever will in junction towns, that a Big Man from up country had taken an option on the Hugh Cameron group of copper claims in the Grand Cañon of the Colorado about half way down to the stream on the Grand View Trail, and would be about doing large things. Says a correspondent, writing in the simple dialect of his surroundings:

"He made good only in the way of developing large credit in Williams. After awhile he quit away on 'business trip'—and has always forgot to come back. He left owing about everybody, not to mention workmen, material men and saloonkeepers. His hotel keeper sued him in Los Angeles for his bed and board and got it. So did some other creditors who happened to push him, along about that time."

FLY TIME IN ARIZONA.

It was two years later, with headquarters still in Los Angeles and reputation flourishing, that the man of many obligations and few embarassments reëntered the neighboring Territory on a genuine raid. Three miles below the town of Bisbee a lime-capped plain begins a gentle sloping from the mountains and keeps on going for a distance of five miles southward to the Mexican line. Twenty-four mining claims possessed by one Hull were situate at Don Luis, an El Paso & Southwestern station where the aforesaid slope begins; but the gentle plain's chief productiveness in that day was not ore but sagebrush; and is now. Bisbee sprawls on some hills three miles to the north.

Having obtained of Hull an option—he was long on options, was Barbour—covering these Don Luis claims, behold le grande promoter prepare to launch. Time spent in option-getting has been fly time, and fly time anywhere is a good time to establish one's standing. He has not overlooked it. The hour is struck, that psychological hour which some say is told by the clock of fate.

Henry P. Barbour announces—your real promoter never merely tells anything, not even the truth—that the Don Luis Townsite and Improvement Company has been formed, Henry P. Barbour president, sumptuous offices in the Copper Queen Hotel, Bisbee's foremost hostelry. The Don Luis Townsite and Improvement Company means—much; much to Arizona; much more to Bisbee. Most to Barbour. But that he doesn't announce. Nor tell. Again to inject the honest if somewhat acrid comments of a truthful correspondent.

PROMOTING BISBEE.

"We think this Barbour is all right. He puts whole page advertisements in the Bisbee papers and the reporters hang around him like starved coyotes. He gets interviewed a mile. Well, he goes to work. He plants this Don Luis place, cuts her all up with stakes into big lots and wide streets, which he names for prominent men all over the Territory. He lays out the main avenue to run straight as a bullet to the Mexico border and he tells us before he's through he's going to make her handsomer than that Riverside street they call Magnolia avenue. We believe him all right, not stopping to remark that this Don Luis plain site would have to be blowed up a heap with dynamite to make root-holes. He tells us how he's going to plant the both sides of it with 6000 trees, and we're some pleased, forgetting he'd have to tote the water clear from Naco. He saves out free lots for the churches and a block for the courthouse, and lots for a hotel, a theater and a big swimming pool with a house over it. All the best people in Bisbee are to move down three miles to Don Luis and we're to get the county seat moved over from Tombstone; this Barbour has got the promise of it. And he agrees to run a trolley trail to connect up Luis with Bisbee and Naco. It sure sounds good to us."

Do you wonder? And then, being familiar with the inevitable collapse of it all after the lot sale, do you wonder either that Arizona is not on Barbour's calling list?

BOOM DAY IN BRONC LAND.

The day of that sale was a boom day for Bisbee and the surrounding country. Free trains were run to Don Luis and crowds swarmed them. There was free lunch, free music, free oratory. Henry P. Barbour, mounting a rough stage, repeated to an immense throng the beautiful details of all the impossible things he had paid and sugared the Bisbee press to declare he would carry out. He was followed in kind on the rostrum by Judge W. H. Barnes of Tucson, now dead, and by Marcus A. Smith, now a Territorial Delegate in Congress. Both made eloquent prediction that Don Luis was destined to be a metropolis in the Southwest. Both held up Henry P. Barbour in impassioned (?) speech as a patron of prosperity and a benefactor of generations unborn. It is now said that both were in Barbour's employ.

After lunch had been eaten the sale of lots at auction began. Every time there fell a lull in the bidding a messenger would come tearing in through the crowd with a fake telegram reserving certain lots and signed with the name of some men well known throughout the Territory. These fakes would be read aloud from the speakers' stand and the bidding fever of the crowd would instantly remount. Barbour claimed to have sold on that one day $150,000 worth of Don Luis lots. It is believed he actually did sell, at from $100 to $500 each, enough to make book showing of $30,000 of which one-third had to be paid down in cash on the spot.

Within two months Henry P. Barbour cleared out, taking with him from $10,000 to $15,000 of the people's money and leaving behind him innumerable debts. As he had not paid out on his option his customers were unable to obtain deeds, and within a short time the Don Luis site reverted to its real owner, Hull.

CHAPTER VI.

SOME LOCAL DEALS.

We of the West are remote one from another. We hunt our criminals afield with gun and cuff and horse and much adoo, but the men who've swindled our neighbors we innocently ask to dine.

Henry P. Barbour found his prestige unhurt when he "permanently returned" from Arizona. Indeed, so well did he stand in the promotion field here that millionaire business men invited him to take a hand in the real estate direction of Playa del Rey, then about to be placed before the public, and gave him valuable stock as consideration for the use of his name.

Yet Henry P. Barbour's past was soiled with the record of no less than six hurried exits from as many prominent cities and he had just run away from a popular outburst in the adjoining Territory. We are in truth a remote people. Not once in all his checkered career, so far as is known, had Barbour changed his name; yet his past was hidden here and he stood well.

To enter into all or many of the gnarled business transactions had first and last by Barbour in Los Angeles would be both stale and unprofitable. One or two may be briefly mentioned.

PECK'S GRAND VIEW.

Barbour bought from George H. Peck 150 lots in San Pedro comprising Peck's Grand View tract, and, singular to record, paid him in full for them. The purchase price was approximately $150 apiece, or $22,500 for the tract. He sold them all at prices ranging from $300 to $600, payable in three installments, one third down. While a large number of these lots were being paid for as agreed by the purchasers, Barbour, in need of ready money, gave deeds to them to Julius Parsell as collateral for a loan of $12,000. On this loan Barbour gave his note to Parsell at six months, with the agreement that he should have the privilege of redeeming the lots on a cash payment of $200 each, in order to get them out of escrow as they should variously fall due to the possession of their purchasers upon completion of third installments.

Barbour failed to meet the note or to redeem the lots. Parsell still has them. The purchasers, who paid their money in good faith to Barbour, whistle.

HERE'S A TWISTER.

Barbour bought from Col. J. B. Neville the Neville tract in San Pedro, sixty-four lots, for $30,000, an average price of about $470. He agreed to pay the $30,000 in eighteen months in four equal installments. Twenty-three thousand dollars of the amount was actually paid, and lots to that amount were released to him. He sold all but five of them, at prices ranging from $850 to $1500. His last payment to Col. Neville was due September 12, 1905, and he failed to meet it. Those lots which had not been up to that time released were resold by the owner. Eleven of them had been, however, sold by Barbour under contract. The money was refunded by him to the purchasers on two only. Purchasers of the other nine had to suffer each a loss of from $400 up, owing to Barbour's inability to either give a deed or return the money they had paid him.

In March of 1905 Julius Parsell released thirty-six of the Neville lots from the original owner at Barbour's request, took a deed for them, and gave Barbour an option to release them on or before September 12, 1905, for a total of $26,000. During July and August of that year Barbour sold these lots (under his option) on terms of one third down and the balance in six and twelve months. September 12 he failed to meet the $26,000 payment and procured an extension from Parsell to February 1, 1906, agreeing to pay Parsell $32,000 (an $8000 bonus) on or before that date. Under this agreement the price payable by him to Parsell was, on each of the lots, from $100 to $500 in excess of the balance due on them to him from his purchasers.

SHOCK OF INDIGNATION.

In December Parsell's attorneys notified these purchasers of the condition of affairs and warned them in their own interests to make no further payments to Barbour until they could know "where they were at." The first shock of surprise and indignation over, the large majority of these purchasers at once put up in escrow the balances due or prospectively due Barbour, and demanded deeds.

Barbour found himself, in reply, unable to put up the heavy difference between the balances due from them and the amounts necessary to release the lots from Parsell. A good many of the purchasers then, rather than lose what they already had invested, themselves paid the difference to Parsell and got deeds. So Barbour owes them the money.

HIS GREAT CHANCE.

Barbour's promotion of the free inner harbor now being dredged at Long Beach is so fresh in the public mind that it need be adverted to but briefly. It was a magnificent conception, and, having now passed wholly from his hands into the control of first-class Redlands capitalists, is looked upon as sure of agreed completion.

The harbor project was Barbour's life chance. Had he previous to its inception and during his Los Angeles career kept himself free of questionable deals, had he lived straight and been square, he could have achieved much and retrieved more through his connection with the undertaking.

But that old and nurtured fatality of character, love of luxury, weak vainness to be flattered, had developed since his coming here into a vicious adultery which, now that it stands revealed, is known to have robbed him not only of his senses but of men's sympathy. "The fool was stripped to his foolish hide."

CHAPTER VII.

THE DOUBLE LIFE.

Throughout the last three years, or ever since the close of his first year in Los Angeles, Henry P. Barbour kept a mistress—and kept it quiet. Quiet, that is, in the sense that knowledge of his ugly sin did not become public property nor reach his faithful wife. In Long Beach he maintained a home. In Los Angeles, at No. 519 West First street, he maintained May Nye. In each city he had handsome offices and a clerical force.

No one seems to know where or just when the promoter and real estate dealer first met the indifferent milliner who is now in San Francisco spending the few thousands she is supposed to have saved from her lustful largess, while he is hiding and doubtless disbursing with lavish hand the last remnant of other people's trust, in Old Mexico. Neither does any one step forward to name a single charm this "lady fair" possessed. Certainly not beauty, say those who have seen her. Assuredly not education nor culture, say those who have conversed with her. She had no wit, says one. Nor vivaciousness, says another. Ah, but she flattered him, says one a little keener than all the rest.

Well, then, that must been how. And he paid a pretty penny for his cozenage! Of "honor and faith and a sure intent" he hadn't any too much to lose. And the "goods he spent," they weren't his. The philosophy of it seems to be, if philosophy there is in cheating and concubinage, desertion and flight, that "a fool must follow his natural bent" though all hell's to pay.

A FORTUNE DISSIPATED.

First and last he is said to have spent on the girl—she's no longer young—more than one hundred thousand dollars in the thirty-six months he kept her for his mistress. Though how any figure can be set with certitude does not appear. It may have been less, it may have been more; it is known to have been a very great deal. The flat No. 519 West First street is common enough to pass. Inside it looked shabby and dreary yesterday with its bare walls and carpetless floors and no curtains to soften the blinds. But it was anything but shabby, saving its morality, when she was there; anything but dreary, save in the thought of what it must some day end in, when she lived there.

The rooms are four and small. Parlor, bed chamber, dining-room, kitchen. He had the walls tinted for her. The carpets were not new; he purchased rugs at $80 apiece to throw over them. He bought (but did not pay for) a chiffonier and dressing-table from Niles Pease Company for $135. They were hauled away last week in a Pease wagon; she had telegraphed consent to the landlord from San Francisco. Hundreds of dollars' worth of other fine things came out of Henry P. Barbour's purse and went into that four-room flat, and hundreds of dollars' worth more of dainty bric-a-brac followed now and again. Considered in its furnishings and with a bright fire blazing in the open grate, Henry P. Barbour perhaps could not have found a cosier place in town to spend the evenings and the after-evenings which he told his loving wife he would be compelled to spend out of town on business.

THE ESPIONAGE OF WOLFE.

S. S. Wolfe was the landlord. He's a genial old Dutchman with bow glasses and a fondness for puttering about in the basement in his shirt-sleeves. He is also a very frank old Dutchman, quite unabashed. "Of course I knowed Mr. Barbour and Miss Nye was terrible good friends," is the way he puts it, "but I thought all along he wasn't married or else a widower, maybe. He used to come to her flat a lot. He never rang. He had a key of his own.

"Then Saturday morning when Miss Nye give up the flat she says to me: 'Mr. Wolfe, Mr. Barbour he's gone and got into trouble and he's going away. I'm going, too, here's the key.' 'Are you and him going to go away, then?' I asks her, and she says to me: 'Yes, but I'm going away alone.' 'Where are you going?' I asks her, and she tells me, 'I'm going to San Francisco—and I won't be back any more.' 'Oh,' I says, 'is that so! What will I do with all the furniture and fine things you've got, Miss Nye?' 'You can just let them stay for the present,' she says. And I did.

"They stayed there all right till last Thursday night, all except two pieces that Pease's men got, and that night after midnight, that's what a man told me afterward, a van come and backed up to the pavement and two policemen stood there. And the men with the wagon got the door of Miss Nye's flat open, and the next morning there wasn't any furniture there. The man that told me about it said he see them, and they had to make three wagon trips to carry all the stuff. I don't know where they got the key. They must a-had a warrant or something I guess, because those policemen was there.

"The Saturday morning Miss Nye went away I says to her, 'Miss Nye, there's just one question I want to ask you.' She laughs at that and tells me she knows what it is. 'Do you then?' I says, 'so what is it?' 'Why,' she says, smiling, 'you want to ask me if Mr. Barbour was a married man.' It surprised me she'd know. 'That's right,' I says; 'was he?' 'Yes,' she says, 'he was and he is.' I studied a minute, then I asks her, 'Miss Nye, did you know he had a wife?' She says yes, she knowed it all along.

"I didn't like that. I thought he was a bachelor or maybe a widower yet."

CHECKING HIS DEBTS.

The law firm of Davis, Post & Kemp, and Murray A. Mitchell, late manager of the Henry P. Barbour Company, are putting in time trying to check up Barbour's debts, personal and business. They decline to make any statement whatsoever at this time. From another and credible source it is learned that the total liabilities of the missing promoter and wife-deserter will schedule up to fully $400,000, possibly a little more. Of this vast sum $200,000 is represented in real estate and other company obligations. The remaining $200,000 is actually made up of Barbour's personal debts. Of this latter amount $100,000 is owed here in Los Angeles. The remaining $100,000 is distributed among creditors from San Francisco to New York.

In the latter $200,000 are innumerable items such as jewelry (for the "lady fair,") clothing from high-priced tailors, shoes, boots, fancy waistcoats, neckties, other haberdashery, cigars, wine, automobiles, and about every other personal expense conjecturable under the sun. How the man ever succeeded in obtaining and using such a monstrous credit on luxuries is a poser.

A glimpse into Barbour's extravagance-closet shows that at the time of his sudden disappearance, immediately after being ejected from membership and office in the Los Angeles Dock and Terminal Company a fortnight ago, he possessed fifteen fine suits of clothes, a dozen pairs of boots, waistcoats by the armload, neckties beyond counting, to say nothing of the costliest of linen and nine topcoats.

His present whereabouts, as a matter of fact, are unknown. But there seems to be nothing gainable by following him up. It is believed he could not be prosecuted successfully, notwithstanding the many times he has shaved the sharp edges of the criminal law.

THIS THE CITY FOR BIG FAIR.

EXPOSITION EXPERT EXTOLS LOCAL ADVANTAGES.

Henry M. Dunlap of Illinois, Who Has Had Part in Some Large Shows, Sees Reasons Why Los Angeles Should Have Exhibition Some Day—Now, as to Peaches and Celery.

Henry M. Dunlap, exposition expert of the State of Illinois, has just come to Los Angeles. He believes that this city, of all in the western part of the United States, is the most favored for a great national or international fair.

Ever since the Columbian Exposition of '93 Mr. Dunlap has been an authority upon congregated publicities, and has officiated—side by side with our Frank Wiggins—at St. Louis and Buffalo. Portland he did not visit, for business reasons kept him at home. He lives in the mid-State city of Champaign, and is by study and profession a horticulturist.

"I haven't been in Los Angeles longer than three days," said Dunlap yesterday morning, "but I can see that this city is the great show place of the whole western country. It takes a long time to get up an exposition, but some day I feel assured that Los Angeles will have one, and then, you may rest assured, the attendance will swamp all known records.

"A midwinter show would draw the people for two reasons—first to see the exhibition and second to see the country. Where you have two objects to hit with your amusement stone the returns will be great, for, as Barnum found out, the people are always anxious to get two things for the price of one.

"A great exposition takes several years in its working up and in that time the facilities Los Angeles has for taking care of people would necessarily be largely increased. The present line of hotels and apartments, ample as they are, must be added to for such an occasion. There is, of course, only one season for an exposition here—the midwinter, which seems like a lengthened spring to all who come here from the East."

In addition to his work as State representative in the various great fairs of the country, Mr. Dunlap has served—and is serving—as a member of the Illinois State Senate, and as a personal venture has experimented largely with various fruits and methods of fruit preservation.

He owns several fruit orchards in Illinois, and has exhibited at most of the big exposition displays. His finds in the preservation of peaches are very interesting to the Southern California horticulturist.

"After several years," he says, "I have been compelled to believe that cold storage of any length beyond a small number of hours has a very deleterious effect upon the flavor of peaches. At the Columbian Exposition I exhibited a fine display of luscious specimens in cold storage for about ten days, and when they came out, although they looked as fresh as when they went in, the taste was gone, and they were all insipid and flat.

"I think that's why Southern California peaches come East so devoid of character, and so uninteresting to any fruit connoisseur. The average eater thinks it's the fault of the peach, but I think it's the fault of cold storage. Some other methods than the present ones may suffice to bring the fruit to its markets in all the quality it doubtless has here.

"I'm under the impression that Southern California celery as it comes into the Middle West market is not the best. We have sent to us the largest and best-looking specimens—but they don't taste the best, by any means."

CITY BULGES WITH GUESTS.

Closing Week the Greatest Ever for Tourists.

But Height of the Season Comes Next Month.

Hotels Pressed for Want of Desirable Help.

Los Angeles has reached the high water mark in number of strangers within its gates and on this gladsome Sunday morning approximately 70,000 tourists from all parts of the civilized world who have fled the wintry blasts of unkindly climates for the warm sunshine and fruit-laden land of Southern California find themselves quartered in the City of the Angels.

This is the consensus of opinion of the management of the many big hotels in this city, given yesterday after one of the greatest weeks known in tourist traffic.

During the entire month of February up to the present date there has been scarcely a night that one of the big hotels has had a vacant room on its hands.

The management of the Westminster say they entertained 1900 more guests during January than they did one year ago and to date they have not had one room vacant one night of this month. This is simply what the managements of the other large hostelries also say.

At least 10,000 more tourists than during February of last year have been provided for so far this month at the various big hotels, and the end is not yet.

The height of the tourist travel is not expected to be reached until March, but so far the influx has surpassed the figures of March of last year and the hotel proprietors tremble when they look forward to what next month may bring.

Rooms are at a premium and good rates are secured at all hotels, even of the second class. "Doubling 'em up" which is the last resort of the clerks is becoming a common incident, and even then the gladsome tourist murmurs not.

The railroads continue the glad refrain of unprecedented travel. The Santa Fé, Southern Pacific and the Salt Lake have been dumping the tourists from the East and the North into this city and are preparing their equipment for the greatest of all rushes in March.

The addition of the great capacity of the new Alexandria Hotel was expected to alleviate to a certain extent the congested conditions, but rooms there have been filled quickly and still they come.

The boarding-houses and apartments for tourists have been inundated, and the landlords are contented to sleep on the dining-room table or floor to make room.

The prosperous condition of the eastern and Middle West States is in a way responsible for the rush of travel, for it is taken for granted that every man, woman and child in the United States wants to come to Southern California for the winter if able.

H. Jerome Toy, editor of the California and Colorado Tourist and Hotel Reporter, says the tourist crop this year and especially this month breaks all records.

"There are twelve new hotels in Los Angels this year," says Mr. Toy, "adding about 1500 additional rooms, and still there is an overflow. San Diego reports a record-breaker in traffic. The management of Hotel Coronado says its rooms have been filled throughout the month and they are daily turning away hundreds."

One of the troubles encountered by the hotel management of Los Angeles has been in securing desirable help. It is estimated that there are places now open for 1000 waitresses or waiters in the city and the hotels are offering $1 a day for girls who will come and help for dinner alone. A good waitress will average $75 per month, including room and board, and in some of the large hotels waiters and waitresses will average as high as $60 per month in "tips."

WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Averill.

The Averill Club met at the residence of Dr. Lamb, No. 2019 Ocean View avenue. The vice-president, Mrs. Anna Smith, conducted the opening exercises, and Mrs. Robinson the current topics section. The programme was good. Mrs. Lamb gave an interesting talk on "Affairs at Panama," reading apropos extracts from letters from a personal correspondent located at that place.

Mrs. Frank McDowell gave a description of the Congressional Library, illustrating with pictures, exterior and interior. Miss Dawson gave a piano solo, "Flowers and Palms." The "Viking Ships" were described by Mrs. Smith. Mrs. Sloan of Stanford recited in an inimitable, amusing manner "The Bear Story," and in response to encore, convulsed her hearers with the tale of "The Chicken Hen." Mrs. Anna S. Averill was listened to with close attention, her theme being "Woman's Federation." Refreshments were served.

Child Study Circles.

At the Thirtieth-street Child-Study Circle meeting three songs by the eighth grade children were beautifully rendered. Mr. Foshay was introduced by the president, who paid him a high tribute for his work among the Child-Study Circles of the city.

Mrs. W. W. Murphy sent word that her coöperation with the California Congress of Mothers and Child-Study Circles had been invaluable. He told the mothers how "we boys" must be managed, and paid a glowing tribute to Mrs. W. W. Murphy and her self-sacrifice and devotion to the Child-Study Circle movement. He gave the song "I Shot an Arrow Into the Air."

The thirtieth-street bulletin was then read by Mrs. M. C. Bettinger. Extracts were given from Children's Rights by Kate D. Wiggins, by Mrs. C. C. Pierce. An invitation was extended by the president to the fathers and teachers to meet with the circle at the home of the president, No. 216 West Adams street, Friday.

The San Pedro-street circle met with about forty present. After the reading and approval of the records, a short musical and literary programme was enjoyed. Dr. Poetenger gave a talk on "School Hygiene."

[illegible] CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 9.—The [illegible] of Midas comes down from the [illegible] of mythology and finds its fulfillment in Mexico; this marvelous [illegible] to gold all it touches. It brings out the silver pesos stored [illegible] years in the State banks, and [illegible] become gold certificates.

The Subcommittee on Coin and Exchange, established in connection with the Monetary Commission of Mexico, [illegible] circulars to all the local banks [illegible] State banks throughout the [illegible]. These institutions were requested to convert, as fast as possible, [illegible] holdings of silver, and in their [illegible] receive gold certificates, so as to [illegible] and fortify the gold assets. [illegible] every bank in Mexico has [illegible], either by letter or tele[illegible].

Within ten days from the issue of the [illegible] to the banks, the sub[illegible] had sold in London and [illegible] York, on account for the State [illegible], and the conversion [illegible] uninterruptedly. In exchange [illegible] amounts in silver, the banks [illegible] them are receiving the certificates created under the law [illegible] December. These certificates [illegible] good for solid gold as soon as [illegible] yellow coins from the Philadelphia mint are delivered in this [illegible] for Mexico is having millions of [illegible] in the ancient city of Penn. [illegible] coinage of gold for Mexico at the [illegible] mint has been increased [illegible]. This first order is about [illegible], and it is expected that the [illegible] government will at once au[illegible] another similar issue.

The Mexican government has made [illegible] effort to dispose of the silver on [illegible] in the local banks, while silver [illegible] its present good quotation. The [illegible], finding that the fixity in [illegible] was not in danger of being [illegible], thanks to the steps foreseen [illegible] undertaken by the government, and [illegible] appreciation in value of the white [illegible], decided to push the conversion [illegible] silver holdings of the banks, and [illegible] turn gold into active circulation, [illegible] the first time in the history of Mexico.

[illegible], a large proportion of the [illegible] of the banks must be retained for [illegible] time, for it is in guarantee of the [illegible] themselves as well as the [illegible] made, but the conversion will [illegible] sliding scale. As soon as one [illegible] percentage of the silver stock [illegible] exchanged for gold certificates, and [illegible] redeemed with gold coin, another percentage will be handled in the [illegible] way, and it is expected that [illegible] six or eight months all the bank [illegible] will be converted into gold. [illegible] will be practically as well [illegible] on a gold basis. When this step is fully consummated, gold will circulate freely in Mexico and there will only be enough silver on the market for change and for small transactions.

DOLLARS AS FREIGHT.

London is buying all the Mexican pesos forwarded by the subcommittee of the Monetary Commission, and this body has been kept very busy of late in the work of transportation. They have had to gather the pesos from almost every State of the republic, pack them, and after arranging for their exportation, ship them to London. This is all done in detail and with extreme care. The London brokers who buy the pesos insist that they all shall be uniform in size and shape, in the packing. They are put into boxes, seventy centimeters in length, forty in width and thirty in height.

As soon as the pesos are received in London, the subcommittee draws on New York against the London purchaser, and the draft is converted into American gold, to the value of pounds sterling represented by the consignment of silver. The American gold coin is sent here, and is already in circulation, pending the further arrival of the Mexican gold coins. By this process the Mexican governmental committee saves the time otherwise lost by transit of the gold from London to New York.

FIFTH AS GOLD PRODUCER.

It is a curious historical fact that Mexico now produces as much gold as the whole world produced in one year during the eighteenth century. Although a famous Austrian geologist, twelve years ago, said that the finding of gold in the world would soon cease, because the subsoil deposits were almost exhausted, his prophecy was not realized. On the contrary, on the day after the treaty of peace was signed in the Transvaal, all the world's great financiers prophesied a perfect rain of gold. The prediction has come true.

The first discovery of gold in Austria and Russia was on such a small scale, relatively speaking, that in 1490 the total amount of gold existing in Europe was only about $200,000,000, and that included all the gold coin and jewelry and works of art. After the conquest of Mexico by Cortez and that of Peru by Pizarro, the "rain of gold" commenced. But although it was remarkable, it was not comparable to that which began to flood the world, after the war in South Africa ended.

From 1491 to 1520, the world's production of gold was $4,000,000 per annum; from 1521, the year Mexico was taken, to 1544, the yearly production was only $4,800,000 and from 1545 to 1560, $5,800,000 per annum. This total production of seventy years was therefore the means of increasing the world's stock by the sum of $328,000,000. The increase was particularly noticeable in 1680, and during the last twenty years of the seventeenth century, the yearly production of gold was $7,400,000. From 1701 to 1800 the annual output of the world was $13,100,000, on the average per annum, and from 1801 to 1850, the average annual production of the world was $15,300,000. From the discovery of gold in California, Australia, Africa and Brazil, the yield increased very sensibly. From 1851 to 1875, the production varied between $120,000,000 and $140,000,000 per annum, jumping in the year 1891 to $135,400,000, in 1892, to $152,200,000, in 1893 to $163,200,000, 1894, $188,400,000, 1895, $207,400,000.

In the year 1895, therefore, the world's production of gold that year was about equal to the entire gold stock in Europe up to 1490; and the increase was such that Mexico's yield at present was equal to the entire yield of the world in one year in the eighteenth century.

In 1904 the gold production of the world had reached $362,600,000, and in 1905, $375,000,000, and the total stock of gold on earth was reputed in 1905, at $11,750,000,000. In this yield, the Transvaal leads, the United States is second, Rhodesia, third, Australia fourth and Mexico fifth. Last year Mexico produced $13,495,000 in gold.

ADVERTISING DOES IT.

J. C. McDonald, formerly of San Francisco, who has come here to occupy the position of assistant general passenger agent of the Mexican Central Railway, says that travel to this country by people of the Pacific Coast of the United States is becoming an epidemic. Californians especially are enthused over Mexico and are intending to come hither not by dozens but by scores and hundreds.

Not only is this result traceable to the low rates made on the Southern Pacific, the Central and allied roads, but to the systematic and untiring work by California papers, especially The Los Angeles Times, which for the past three years has been advertising Mexico as it never was advertised in the past.

Californians are not only attracted to Mexico by the rare beauty of the landscape scenery, and the curious customs and costumes in this country, but also by the exceptionally good opportunities for investment afforded to American capital.

LOW RATES FOR BUYERS.

Through the efforts of G. W. Hibbard, general passenger agent of the National Lines of Mexico, an extremely low rate for Mexico City merchants to all parts of the United States has been arranged. Merchants in any part of Mexico desirous of visiting wholesale houses in the United States can secure tickets from any part of the country over the National Lines to the border for one-fifth of the regular fare, and the same rate will prevail on the other side of the border.

This is the first time such a concession has ever been made to Mexico merchants. It will naturally do much to increase the trade relations now so strong between Mexico and the United States. Heretofore Mexico merchants have gone to Europe because the steamship lines have offered them very low rates. It is expected that most of the new orders resulting from this new inducement will be placed with American houses west of the Mississippi and not a few with California concerns.

HAWKEYES' BIG DAY.

Plans for the Annual Gathering at East Lake Park of All Iowans in Southern California.

The annual picnic of the Iowa Association will be held in Eastlake Park Thursday, with a good old eastern proviso attached. It is stipulated that if it should be raining on the morning of the 22d the picnic will be postponed until Tuesday, February 27. It is estimated that 25,000 people visited the park during the last year's picnic, and they talk about a bigger crowd this year.

All resident and visiting Iowans are invited to attend and take lunch baskets with them, providing for a few more than their own.

A business session of the association will be held at 1:30 p.m., and a soldiers' reunion at 2 p.m. C. H. Parsons of Pasadena, is secretary, and he will be glad to give full information.

This gathering is all that there is of the Iowa Association, and it has been found that it presents a rare opportunity for all visiting and former residents of the State to get together, from all over Southern California.

VENICE plunge opens today. Unsurpassed service.

The most important contribution to the art and sciences of the century has been given to the world through the patient and persistent work of a California man, Mr. Z. F. Vaughn, who, after years of discouraging work, has discovered the process of tempering the ductile metals—

GOLD, SILVER and COPPER.

It is the lost art of the ancients rediscovered and made of commercial value.

Tempered

Gentlemen: Enclosed herewith please find check for $.................for which please send me a certificate for..............shares, which will share in all the profits of the company.

Name....................Address..............

Tempered Gold

Gold will make fortunes for its users in the manufacture of surgical knives, hypodermic and suture needles, solid tempered gold instead of gold-filled watch cases, tempered gold pins without iridum points, manufactured at one-half the present cost. TEMPERED GOLD settings and mountings for precious gems and a thousand and one items of manufacture in gold and silver jewelry will make this process a money-maker of unequaled proportions.

Tempered Copper

will displace the use of brass in the manufacture of all classes of castings where a wearing surface is required. It will make possible enormous savings in the use of TEMPERED COPPER for electrical equipment. Copper

Tempered Silver

Silver will revolutionize the silverware trade in the manufacture of Solid Silver Cutlery, solid silver forks which will not bend, and knives with sharp cutting edges.

The Tempered Ductile Metals Company

This company has been organized for the purpose of exploiting this wonderful invention. It has a capital of 1,000,000 shares of the par value of $1.00 each.

The management of the company is in the hands of successful and intelligent men of high standing in Los Angeles.

The company has equipped a factory 20x90 feet in Los Angeles for the manufacture of surgical instruments, and is already crowded with orders. It will later establish a plant for the manufacture of solid silver cutlery and a large factory for the manufacture of copper castings and electrical equipment. Parties in New York state that they can at once furnish the company with three orders for copper castings in small sizes which will aggregate half a million dollars in value.

The tempered metals as produced by this process were submitted to Dr. Julius Koebig, the well-known metallurgist of Los Angeles, who found them to be in every way as represented by Mr. Vaughn, and he has made a written report to this effect, which can be seen at the offices of The General Securities Co.

The company will establish agencies in every large city in the country to market its goods, and under careful, progressive management will build up a business of magnificent proportions.

A proposition has recently been made to the company by foreigners who propose to organize a European company on a large scale, furnishing all the necessary capital and leaving this company a large percentage of the stock of the foreign company in its treasury.

The protfis of the business are enormous, and its field is world-wide, without the possibility of any competition whatsoever.

The company offers at this time, through its Fiscal Agents, The General Securities Company, 100,000 shares of its Treasury Stock at 25 cents per share, for the purpose of furnishing the working capital for its surgical instrument plant. This plant has received unsolocited such a large number of orders for its product that its success is already assured, and when the medical fraternity throughout the country is reached it will be necessary to enlarge the present plant. We have received many testimonials from physicians who are daily using our product.

Few such opportunities have been presented to conservative investors to share in the earnings of a company which is destined to equal in its growth the great industries of the country.

It is a substantial business with great profits, and it should earn greater dividends than any industrial in the United States.

Full information, together with a prospectus, will be mailed free by the fiscal agent to all interested.

We would suggest that out-of-town subscribers wire their subscriptions for stock at our expense.

The new-born heir to the throne of China has been named Pu. It is a small name to give to a person who has such a big job ahead of him.

When the coal miners of Pennsylvania go out on strike six weeks from now they will go without the sympathy of the public. This makes them losers at the very start.

It is unfortunate for little baby Pu that he is descended from the gods. The gods do not seem to have the pull that they had in former times. Even the Chinaman is saving money on punk sticks, these days.

Nature and the good Lord seem to meet every emergency as it arises. Although the population of Southern California has been so largely increased during the past year, the poppy crop has also been augmented sufficiently to go around, and there will be an armful for us all.

At the present time foreign nations are displaying great interest in the republics of South America. But doubtless it is largely with the object in view of collecting interest on the money which the said foreign nations have loaned out to the republics hereinbefore referred to.

Instead of sending an army to argue with the Chinese at the point of the bayonet and the mouth of the cannon, why don't we send a delegation of some of our sensible civilians there to talk the thing over in a spirit of reason and common sense? The Chinese understand justice as well as we do, and perhaps better. They have made a study of it for the past 6000 years.

It is gradually but surely dawning on the dull public mind that some of Uncle Sam's employés are giving a good deal of their time and his to outsiders, and are drawing salaries from extraneous sources contrary to the statutes in such cases made and provided. In other words the Dutch word for canal, which is graft, appears to be well understood and generally acted upon by the employés aforesaid.

At least five broad boulevards, reaching from the foothills back of Los Angeles all the way to the ocean, are now under contemplation. Let one of these splendid highways be set apart exclusively for automobiles, and let it be made a rule that buzz wagons confine themselves strictly to that road. Otherwise there will be misunderstandings that may result in more shooting scrapes than the city police force and the constabulary of the various townships can well attend to

THE YELLOW PERIL.

There is no use trying to minimize the gravity of the situation in China. The Celestial Empire seems to be determined to have trouble. In fact, nothing but trouble, as the matter looks now, will satisfy our friends in the Flowery Kingdom. Now, it is the conviction of The Times, deliberately arrived at by careful study of the question, that we are in a large measure responsible ourselves for this attitude of the Chinese. Our exclusion laws aimed at the Chinese people are severe, but the laws themselves are the least of the trouble. The administration of the laws by small-bore politicians who happen to have arrived at an office, is cruel, sometimes cruel to the point of actual brutality. But when every allowance in this direction has been made, one comes to the conclusion that this exclusion policy of America is, after all, only used as a subterfuge by the Chinese, who are determined to make trouble for the "foreign devils" in their empire, and for the products of these outsiders arriving in the empire.

The dispatches coming to the press generally speak of this as trouble in China and trouble with China. But if we go down to the root of the question, and dig to the utmost ramification of the roots, the trouble is oriental, and in time we will probably find that it embraces the whole Orient. The truth might as well be faced. The meaning of the whole business is Asia for the Asiatics. It is the Monroe doctrine of America applied by the yellow races to their situation. Before we are done with this trouble it is quite likely that it will ramify from Manchuria, from the banks of the Amoor River to the Straits Settlements and around the Indian Ocean, including Hindoo.

The mainspring of the whole movement, although carefully concealed, has come to be pretty clearly recognized by the effects produced. Japan is at the bottom of it all. Intelligent Caucasians, whether American or European, who have spent much time in China and Japan, and whose minds are uninfluenced by prejudice, pretty well agree that Japan means to control the Orient. British subjects of wide experience and high intelligence, although recognizing fully the situation growing out of the treaty between their country and Japan, very frequently express the opinion that not only the United States and Germany, but England herself, will have to face Japan before many years. Only yesterday H. V. Carmichael, who has spent the last eleven years at Shanghai and who has been for thirty-five years in China, says that foreigners in that empire are "sitting on the edge of a precipice." He says further: "The entire trouble is due to Japanese influences, and to the influences of half-baked Chinese students from Japan, returning to their own country with the ambition to elevate China in a year to the place which it has taken Japan fifty years to attain." More than this, he goes on to say: "Japan is working cunningly but surely for the commercial domination of China. Japanese officers and policemen in uniform go about Dalny, Mukden, and New Chwang, tearing down placards and posters advertising American and foreign goods generally, and openly advise, urge, and even command the people to have nothing to do with western goods, but to use Japanese goods for all needs not supplied by their own country. Japanese Shintu and Buddhist priests flood Manchuria in the wake of the Japanese armies, urging their people to reject all religions but the religion of Japan."

For two years past it has been plain to many of us that such must be the outcome of the triumph of Japanese arms. There is no concealing the fact that they are a very capable people in a certain way. They are energetic, closely economical, industrious, and capable of doing as great things in the arts of peace as they accomplish in war. They are not originators. They are imitators. They will take every mechanical art that the western nations invent, and they will duplicate them in their own workshops in Japan. They need room in which to exploit their energies, they need an expanded commerce, and they very naturally look to the people of their own and closely kindred races, people speaking their own and kindred languages, people worshiping according to their own and kindred religions, as the best field in which to exploit their industrial enterprises and their commercial expansion. They have always been exceedingly exclusive. It was at the cannon's mouth that we forced them to open their ports to commerce at all. That same spirit is in them still. They want western civilization up to a certain point. They are exceedingly shrewd, and will take from us just what will make for their own betterment. They will take no more.

The nation at this moment, because of its glorious triumph over the great empire of Russia, is exceedingly exalted in its own conceit. At the same time the race is both conservative and cunning. There is nothing of impatience about the Japanese character. Of all the people on earth they know best that "all things come to him who waits." They will wait, and wait patiently, but while they are waiting they will never relax one moment from getting ready to accomplish their purpose when the right time comes.

If it were not for the alliance, offensive and defensive, between Japan and England, the whole affair would be an easy one. The path to follow would be plain. Should western nations in concert serve notice on Japan that her dreams of aggression and expansion, excepting by means of fair, open competition with the rest of the world, must cease, the Japanese government would have to give heed to that message. But tied up as England is by her treaty with Japan, the situation is extremely and gravely complicated. The Chinese fully understand at this moment that no concert of the powers like that which took place in the previous Boxer rising, is possible now. These Japanese missionaries, industrial, commercial, and religious, which we hear of overrunning China, have lost no time and spared no pains in making known to the Chinese the effect of their treaty with England, in tying the hands of that power from joining in any concert proposed by western nations. The average American and Englishman during the last two years has seemed to think it was a thing to laugh at when anybody spoke of the Yellow Peril. There are 6000 Americans, men, women and children, in China at this moment, and the latest news is that they are in imminent "peril of death at the hands of Chinese mobs."

There is a Yellow Peril. It raises its myriad heads in every part of the Orient today, and these heads are likely to rise higher and in greater numbers from month to month. It is estimated that there are 3000 Americans engaged in commercial pursuits in China, and that they are all victims of the boycott. There are 1500 other Americans employed in one occupation or another in the Chinese Empire. There are 1400 American missionaries engaged in mission work in that empire. Now, every unprejudiced, intelligent, and sensible person in America knows that a vast multitude of these missionaries would do better to stay at home than to go convert the Chinese. By all accounts, not a few of them need a little converting themselves. But that is neither here nor there. It only aggravates the danger of the situation. The missionary engaged in improper work in China only adds fuel to the flames and makes the situation more dangerous.

DENS OF INFAMY MUST GO.

Wine, women and song have long been pointed out as the roads to ruin. It is a cowardly and a brutal excuse invented by men to palliate their sins and to soften the blow when their sins have found them out. On the roads to ruin there should be new sign boards erected, and they should read: "Wine, men and song." It is time to do it. Adam blamed the woman, but the daughters of Eve have far more frequent cause to place the blame of the world's sorrow, suffering, shame and death on man.

Here was a case of it right in Los Angeles a few days ago—the case of poor, weak little Minnie Blough, now asleep under the snow in her far away grave among her native hills of Michigan. The story has stirred the pitying heart of the entire community, which has been immeasurably shocked by the revelation of her untimely and pitiful end.

Minnie Blough was a waitress in a Los Angeles restaurant, and was none the worse for that. It is one of many respectable ways of earning an honest living. She was a country girl, and came here from her father's farm, innocent doubtless, and surely unsophisticated. She was young and attractive. In fact she had all the elements about her to make her the prey of the predatory brutes who go about the world seeking whom they may devour in their bestial passions.

The fiends who work the ruin of young girls in the cities and towns of America, have as necessary allies the road house, the assignation house and the unspeakable resorts where private drinking and eating rooms are furnished indiscriminately to men and women of all sorts and conditions, without any questions being asked so long as they have the price. Los Angeles is cursed with many of these places, and it was in one of them that Minnie Blough spent her last fatal hour.

There has always been crime in the world, and doubtless it will continue to exist until the end of time. But, civilization is happily waging a constant warfare against evil in all its forms, and we are led to believe that conditions are slowly but gradually being improved. More so today than ever before there is a sentiment in favor of reform in both political and social life evident in every community throughout the nation. Good men and good women are fighting the wrong wherever it shows its face, and, here and there, they are winning. God knows there is crying need for the warfare.

As far as Los Angeles is concerned, the needed reform which most seriously presses at the present hour is the extermination of the houses of infamy which threaten the city with the very wrath of God. And among such hell-holes the private-room café, the drinking places open alike to men and women, are the most pernicious and dangerous. It is into these places that the conscienceless scoundrels of the town lure young girls, induce them to drink, and thus accomplish their ruin. It is painful to be compelled to speak in this plain, blunt way on such a subject, but it is not a theme nor is it a time upon which words can well be minced.

Something must be done, and done without delay. It needed the Blough case in all its sad and pathetic phasings to shock the town into a sense of its responsibilities. Let us put our hands to the work. In the name of decency let us not rest until these dens of unutterable infamy are uprooted, once and for all.

OUR MUNICIPAL TANGLE.

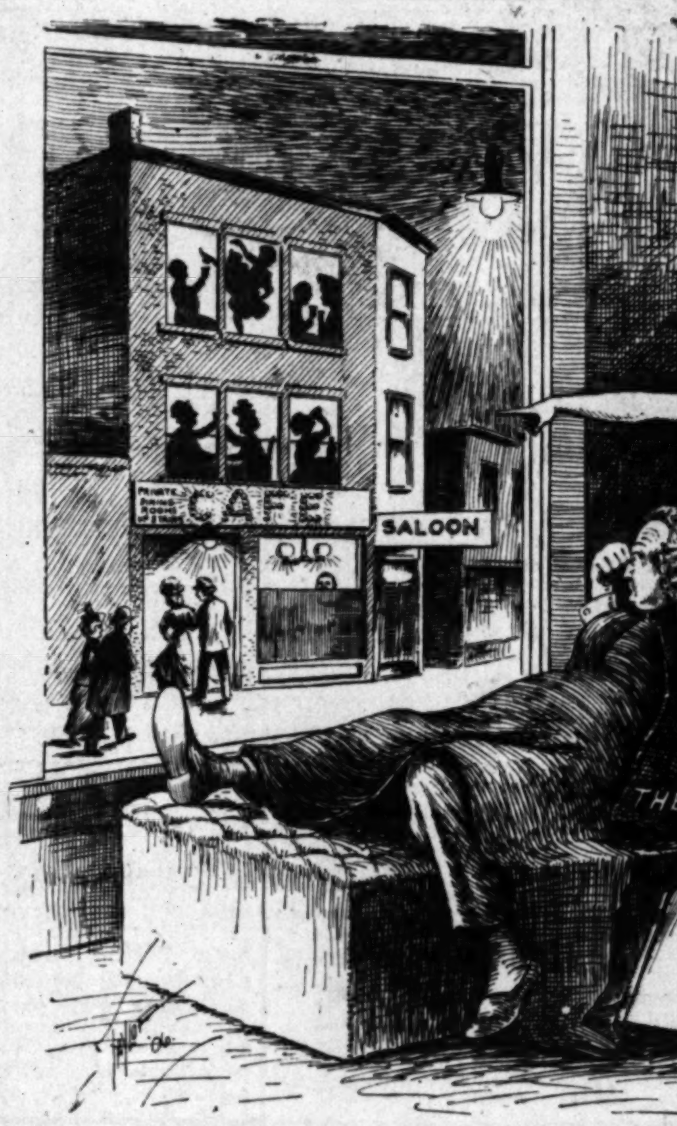
There is not even a remote probability that the "conciliation committee" appointed to effect some sort of compromise between the belligerent Mayor and the equally belligerent City Council, in the Board of Public Works imbroglio, will bring about a settlement of the controversy. The situation is such that compromise is virtually out of the question, as the desire on both sides to control the Board of Public Works, with the vast patronage which it will dispense, is so strong that neither side will willingly yield. Machine politicians are like the bulldog, which never releases its hold, when once it has set its jaws into anything, until forced to do so by a superior power.

Unfortunately, in the present instance, no power exists by which the Mayor and the Council can be forced into an agreement or a compromise. They stand within their recognized legal rights, which cannot arbitrarily be taken from them. Meantime, the interests of the city suffer. The present deadlock may be continued indefinitely, or until those engaged in it go out of office through the expiration of their official terms, unless some way out of the difficulty, exclusive of the Council and the Mayor, can be found.

A possible solution, as The Times has pointed out, may be found through the application, by certain citizens, to the Superior Court, asking for a mandamus to compel the City Clerk to advertise for bids for needed street improvements. It would indeed be fortunate for the city if this application should be granted. Such action by the court would not determine, to a finality, the validity of the charter amendment out of which has grown all the trouble; but it would remove the existing embargo upon the transaction of the city's legitimate business. It would serve, so to speak, to restore the ante-bellum status and permit the city government to exercise its rightful powers of autonomy. Meanwhile, the important but less pressing question regarding the validity of the obnoxious amendment could be thrashed out in the higher courts, while the regular and necessary business of the city would proceed in an orderly manner. Even if the amendment should be declared valid, the acts of the Councilmanic Board of Public Works would be recognized as valid de facto, and would be as binding as if they were valid de jure.

The tangle into which the city government has been precipitated is intolerable. It is also illogical. It is also anachronistic. There must be some logical way out of the muddle. There is some way out, or our municipal government is inoperative. The pending application for a mandamus points the way. It may lead out of the darkness into light.

AN AWAKENING.



TRAINING APPRENTICES.

One of the greatest practical problems of the present day is the adequate supply of properly-trained workmen in the large number of industries that may be classed together as "mechanical." The old apprenticeship system had its disadvantages; the indenture for a term of years, with legal penalties attaching to violation of the terms of contract, had a smack of serfdom that is impossible in these modern times and in a great land of freedom like our own. But it had the sovereign virtue of thoroughness; the apprentice who had served out his articles, passing from department to department and mastering the details of each during a period of five or six years, was a real master of his craft when he emerged into the journeyman stage of his career. For often in these days of rush and hurry, and with no provision for imparting a complete apprenticeship training, also with the conscientiously disposed employer having no hold upon his partially-trained youths in the workshop, the boy drops into the performance of one particular task in which his capacity has been proved, and there he remains through those priceless early years that should be devoted to the acquirement of general all-round knowledge and efficiency. In such cases—and they amount to an appalling percentage of present-time apprentices—the real value of apprenticeship, as understood in the old days, has been entirely missed.

But modern conditions require even more, and a great deal more, than the practical skill in a trade through all its departments which the indentured form of apprenticeship formerly secured. We want mechanics who can work with the head as well as with the hand—we want our bright youths in the workshop to have every chance of advancing to the highest executive positions, for which scientific and technical knowledge, together with administrative experience, is absolutely indispensable. Therefore a modern apprenticeship system must take what is good from the old indentured plan and graft onto it what is demanded in the special circumstances created by modern progress.

The first attempt made to meet the situation has been to send likely youths to colleges equipped with technical departments or to technical schools specially devoted to particular industries. But it is now generally admitted that this system is both defective and ineffective. It cuts off many a poor boy, who has perforce to go direct into the workshop, from education and opportunities that are rightfully his; it often develops in the college-trained youth theoretical knowledge pure and simple, without the practical knowledge that is its indispensable complement if a really successful career is to be achieved.

Thus we reach the point that what is wanted is really a combination of school and workshop. The boy entering the latter should not leave the former; training of head and of hand should advance together. Splendid pioneer work in this direction is being performed by the General Electric Company in several of its great establishments. Thus at its factory in West Lynn, Mass., the apprentices are regularly indentured; there is no penalty involved by a boy who quits at any time, but the moral effect of the regular bond to serve through the full period of four years' training is found to bind all the lads who are really worth the trouble of training. The old night-school system is abandoned; the blowing of the factory whistle in the morning is the signal for the boys to assemble in the school, when both physically and mentally they are capable of their best work. The teachers are the company's own engineers, draughtsmen and shop foremen. This contact during school hours with the same men who direct them during working hours in the factory has a tendency to maintain better discipline among the apprentices, because school does not then appear to them as a separate institution, but as only one essential part of apprentice work. The lads draw their wages for their school hours just as for their hours in the workshop. This means considerable expense to the company, but experience shows that the cost is more than offset by the zest with which the boys apply their school-gained knowledge to the work of the factory.

Although much of the school exercises may be, and indeed should be, a continuation of grammar-school studies, a practical turn is given to the education at every possible point. For example, if a lad is set to figure out the weight of a rod of iron, he carries the material to a pair of scales to test for himself the accuracy of the result he has arrived at. So with the application of all abstract mathematical formulae, the real understanding of which comes only with their practical use.

It will be recognized that this is a work of national benefit that has been started by the General Electric Company, and one that should be followed by other big employing firms. Carefully-trained apprentices may leave the parent establishment, but as a rule the best lads will stick to the firm that has educated them in their trade, knows and appreciates their special aptitudes, and offers them a continuous field of promotion. Nor, in the broadest spirit of general industrial advancement, need the others who go elsewhere be grudged to their new employers. When the system comes into wider use, the interchange of well-trained apprentices will be in the natural order of things. But the pioneers of such a movement must necessarily show unselfishness, and all honor is due to the men who are breaking ground with this good new work—a work which in the long run will mean so much for the industrial preëminence of America.

RESTORING THE MISSIONS.

The prodigious energy displayed by Bishop Conaty since his advent into the religious and civic life of Southern California has been a source of amazement to the public to which he has endeared himself by his splendid qualities of heart and mind, and especially by his broad Christianity and his liberality of view toward all his neighbors without regard to religious beliefs. He has accomplished so much in so short a time that the people prepared themselves not to be surprised at any new wonder that might rise up under his hands.

But it is safe to say that no one was quite prepared for the sensation which the bishop created yesterday by his announcement that he will restore the Mission San Juan Capistrano to its ancient glory. The story was told in yesterday's issue of The Times, and no story could thrill the heart of California more. Every adobe brick that devastating time has stolen from the noblest of all the wonderful structures which the Padres erected in the days of old, will be placed back again. Moreover, the legitimate successors of the Padres, the brown priests of St. Francis, are to come back to their own, and will again walk the cloisters of San Juan, and sing their matins under its eaves.

Nor is this all. It is whispered that Bishop Conaty, now that he has set his hand to a task which so appealed to his heart and soul from the beginning of his ministrations in the diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles, will not stop nor be content with the work that is to be done at Capistrano. He has others of the old Missions in mind. There will be other restorations. Who knows but we shall see the day when the ghosts of the first Franciscans may trudge El Camino Real again from end to end, and see their well-loved shelters rebuilded and recreated as they left them when they laid down to sleep at the last Angelus their ears ever heard on this earth?

Bishop Conaty is claimed as a New England Yankee. It seems like a miracle that from such a quarter should come the restoration of the Missions of California.

It appears that in other parts of the country the Typographical Union has met with as decided a reverse in its strike for an eight-hour day and a closed shop as befell the gang in Los Angeles. The strike is a thing of the past and has accomplished nothing, except to increase the number of open shops. On page 14, Part VI, of today's issue are printed reports from many cities showing that the much-vaunted walk-out has been a ridiculous failure, despite the absurd claims of such fellows as Hay and Fennessy that outside of Los Angeles the strikers have won the day. There is also printed on this page a letter giving some of the reasons why such a movement must fail and why the employing printers must fight the trouble-makers to a finish.

We shall soon have enough "isthmus" canals—on paper. A Mexican journal prints a report that Great Britain and Japan have practically decided to construct a ship canal across Nicaragua, on the lines of the plan rejected by us, Great Britain to furnish the capital and Japan the labor. Meantime, what we should like to see is one real canal dug into the ground.

The Lancer.

ISN'T it worthy a sardonic smile, hearing that Ogden of Utah has put on the lid? This is the dispatch:

"The 'lid' was put on gambling this week in Ogden by the District Attorney, and sixty arrests were made. The saloons will be closed on Sundays and [illegible] scarlet women will be driven out of the community."

It seems to The Lancer it would be [illegible] logical, more efficacious, and certainly more moral, to drive out of Ogden and all Utah the male prostitutors who have made more scarlet crime in the blasphemed name of religion than there is blood from Calvary to cleanse. I refer to the Mormon priests.

So long as the polygamy of Mormonism continues to breed its pollution in the Latter Day Church it is ribald mockery to talk of putting the lid on in Utah. So long as a foul hierarchy [illegible] the birth of bastards in Utah the scarlet women of the redlight may hold up their heads in mitigated shame in that State.

Put the lid on the Bee Hive House, [illegible] gentlemen, and the world may [illegible] some faith in your pretensions.

[illegible] of the Poodle Press.

It appears that two young New [illegible], society men, were asked the other night by the management of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel to retire from the palm room because they were not in evening dress. According to a palpitating wire the request has caused "intense indignation" in metropolitan club circles.

Far be it from the mood of The Lancer to take up cudgels for johnny-[illegible]. But the insolence of the impertinence, as it were, stirs the American blood. They were Americans and presumably well and decently clothed. That the toadstool management of a [illegible] inn presumes to affront them because of the cut of their clothes!

Satisfactory in the extreme it would have been to take that cad-headed management by the crop of its swollen [illegible] and drop it down an elevator shaft. But wiser and better and more [illegible] would it be now for all self-respecting Americans of both sexes to give the Waldorf-Astoria the cool go-by for a week or two until the resultant loss of dollars brings the preposterous idiots in charge of it to their [illegible] senses.

Our Friends from Heinzeland.

Feeling in need of refreshment the other night I linked arms with one of my cult likely minded and we fared forth to a neighboring café and ordered food. The ham emporium [illegible] by us happens to be [illegible] with a bar, or the other way round if you like, and the pay side of the same was two-deep with foreign-[illegible] writers from Heinzeland, or (as some call it) Montana. They were a lusty lot, big and mostly smooth-faced and young, and the frequent clink of their glasses ran like some bibulous obligata through the gale of their talk.

I remember we had just bitten into the second hypotheneuse of our severed sandwiches when above the noise of them rose the First anguished wail:

I—n th' sha—de of the ol—d app'l treeee—ee!

"Here!" I cried, "what's the matter with you?" and sunk the fingers of my outflung hand into the collar of my friend across the table. "What bit you? You sit down!"

He was trembling like an aspen. "My God, boy," he whispered, "wh-what was it "

I told him, to quiet his shaken nerves, it was the Jap swamper intoning prayers for the souls of Togo's sons slain in battle——

In—uh th' s-s-s-hade-ud 'v theee ol—d a—p'l tre—ee!

Oh Well, It Wasn't Far.

I got my friend by the throat that time and choked him till he gasped he would sit down. It were well had I kept my hold. For there ensued the wildest outfall of sounds from human throats it has been my agony to endure in twenty years. Followed clingingly by my friend I edged out of the stall to investigate, arms crossed before my face in fight fashion.

The suspense was over quickly. It was the Heinzelanders—singing. Eh, well! They no longer stood two-deep along the wet shelf, but hung ten-thick in a ring on each other's necks—singing. I judged they were exercising their vocal organs by the barometer instead of the scale, and it was dirty weather. In and out, up and down, through and through the maelstrom rang one golden baritone in perfect note, and the rich beauty of his voice made of the contrasts a mad bedlam.

We fixed our consolidated eye on one pink-jeweled youth of pounds surplus who believed with all the heart and lungs of him that he was singing—tenor. (He had no soul to believe with.) Strained on tiptoe, clenching the bar-rail in both sinewy hands, he was hallooing at the top of Mt. Whitney's snowy seclusion and hitting—Keeler. That far was he off compass and plane. Just as he was wringing the last discordant drops out of his deflated diaphragm we seized him, in the midst of the wild whirlpool of sounds and at the precise moment when the song maiden who had come so far to the city with her burden of dewy posies was about to lay the tender tribute on mother's grave.

Eh? Why no, I don't believe I care to go on. It was only a little way to the Receiving Hospital and they were from—Montana.

THE CAPITAL OF THE STATE.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, Feb. 16.—Mayor [illegible], sighing for new worlds to conquer like his great prototype Alexander, has once more taken cognizance of the humiliating fact that the State of California has a voice in the management of San Francisco [illegible]. This has been a sore point with Mayor Schmitz for a long time, and it is a matter to which the labor [illegible] have devoted much anxious [illegible]. Far be it from me to [illegible] for such solicitude for the [illegible] of San Francisco, but it must certainly be annoying to [illegible], including the Governor of the State interfering with opportunities. A [illegible] Legislature provided that the Governor of California shall participate in the proceedings of the Harbor Board and vote on all questions relative to seawall construction, and this is considered to be an infringement upon the rights and liberties of the free and independent.

Next Wednesday Gov. Pardee is to meet the Harbor Commissioners and Mayor Schmitz, in order to consider certain plans and estimates and it is possible that the Mayor will take this opportunity to raise his little point. The Governor, of course, can do nothing, but he might be persuaded to make a recommendation to the Legislature.

But this matter is a very simple one and there should be no paltering with the labor unions whose motives are so obvious that even a detective could see through them. It is perfectly true that there is no direct taxation in support of the San Francisco harbors, which are supported by the [illegible] system of tolls. But taxation is none the less real because it is indirect, and as a matter of fact every business interest in the State has to contribute indirectly to the cost of the San Francisco harbors. The tolls are, of course, added to the values of the merchandise that passes in through the Golden Gate and the harbors are therefore State affairs and the State is entitled to a very loud and continuous voice in their management. Two of the present commissioners, Charles [illegible] and Henry J. Crocker, were appointed by Gov. Pardee. Next month [illegible] D. Mackenzie's term will expire and the Governor will then have a third appointment in his hands. He [illegible] therefore plenty of power to turn down any proposal that San Francisco may have to make.

[illegible] W. Story, the celebrated artist, has visited the Crocker gallery in Sacramento and has said exactly what he thinks of it and that is not nearly as much as the city thinks of it. He seems to have a special instinct for picking out the works of art before which we have been in the habit of standing in silent adoration and recommending that they be forthwith hung where no one can see them. The [illegible] Murillos and Tintorettos are condemned by this ruthless critic to [illegible] passable copies, while Nahl's big picture, whose aggressive colors have dazzled us for so long, is pronounced by Mr. Story to be too florid. [illegible] there is indignation, and Mr. Story has been freely lectured on his temerity in criticising pictures that have met with the approval of so many Sacramentans. It is admitted that the pictures are crowded [illegible], but that there should be any question as to the genuineness of the old masters that have hypnotized the public for so long is rather more than the city can stand.

Sacramento is in a flutter of excitement at the advent of the Western Pacific Railway. Specifications have been officially filed showing that the [illegible] line is to run from A to Y [illegible] between Nineteenth and Twentieth, and in addition there are branch lines and a passenger depot. These projects have now been before the public for several days and the public does not know quite what to [illegible] of them.

For these many months past the Western Pacific has been hailed as the [illegible] of life and light to Sacramento and to the valley in general, and [illegible] seems that the city is to be [illegible] at one blow of the railway [illegible] so a great many people are [illegible] point in spite of the fact that it is so easy not to write letters to the newspapers. One party favors the appearance of the railway, anywhere and anyhow, so long as it does appear, while the other party is audibly wondering if, after all, Sacramento has not made herself too cheap. That the city has been owned these many years by the Southern Pacific is merely a truism. What if it should now turn out that the Western Pacific is to be a joint owner with the Southern Pacific and that whereas she was once beaten only with whips she is now to be beaten with scorpions?

The Western Pacific seems to be a good deal like the wind which bloweth where it listeth and this sudden incursion has rather taken our breath away. Adjacent property owners are wondering how they will like to have Western Pacific trains in their back yards, while the trustees of the new High School are beginning to fear a passenger station may prove inconsistent with a due application to studies. A railway in prospective is delightful but a railway in actuality is quite another matter.

Bunkers's testimony has come to an end and it seems to leave the impression that the witness was willing to say pretty much anything that would best serve his own ends. There is no doubt that he expected to be liberated as a result of his action. He says that District Attorney Seymour made him no definite promises except that he would do everything possible for him. To the weak mind of the ex-Senator this was no doubt conclusive and now he finds that the weary weeks are dragging along and he is still in durance vile. Then again he has found out that French actually tried to help him by finding bondsmen for him and so his inclinations are divided between what he is willing to do for the State and what he now wants to do for French.

There is no need to go further into the merits of a case of which the whole State is heartily sick and tired, but the spectacle of Bunkers ought to be an eternal object lesson of the legislative material that is good enough for the labor union vote. We have here a proof that anything in human shape is good enough so long as it will shout at the right time and vote in the right way.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Bill Introduced by Congressman Snapp of Illinois—Bankers Recognize Its Benefits.

[Chicago News:] Mr. Snapp of Illinois has introduced in Congress an admirable bill for the establishment of postal savings banks. As he is a member of the House committee on the postoffice and post-roads, to which the measure was referred, there is reason to hope the bill will receive from that committee and from the House the consideration to which it is entitled on its merits. In this day of prosperity, when bank vaults are overflowing with money, one might even suppose that short-sighted bankers themselves would cease to fight against the granting of important benefits to the people in the form of safe and convenient facilities for the accumulation of small savings. Bankers of broad views long ago recognized that postal savings banks would be beneficial rather than injurious to their business.

The Snapp bill has many of the important features of the Lorimer bill, which in 1898 was urged upon the attention of Congress by many thousands of petitioners, by the American Federation of Labor and other large organizations. The excitement attending the preparations for the Spanish war and the bitter hostility of some political bankers caused the bill to fall into neglect at Washington about that time that Dewey won the battle of Manila Bay. The present revival of the plan should arouse the keenest interest of those who realize the enormous value of the benefits which postal savings banks would confer upon the public. While practically every other civilized country on the globe thus encourages thrift among the masses of its people the United States has been content thus far with its record of having killed the postal savings bank system of the Hawaiian Islands on their annexation to this country.

By its terms the savings bank bill now before Congress shows that the argument against postal savings banks most frequently urged—that the government would have no use for the money—has no foundation. The government has entered upon the huge task of digging the Panama canal. Bonds issued to pay for this work would go far toward establishing a basis for the investment of funds deposited in government savings banks. But the Snapp bill also arranges for the investment of funds in State bonds and bonds of municipalities and counties when the issues are guaranteed by the States in which the counties or municipalitis are situated. Other county or municipal bonds may be used for purposes of investment if a Federal commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General and the Attorney-General approve of theme and if they meet certain requirements stated in the bill.

There is no better time to secure the enactment of a postal savings bank bill than the present. Friends of postal savings banks should acquaint themselves with the terms of the Snapp bill (fifty-ninth Congress, first session, H. R. 48,) and if they approve of the measure they should urge its passage in ways which cannot be ignored by the statesmen at Washington.

ESCONDIDO WATER SYSTEM.

Eighty-foot Dam Impounds Billion and a Half Gallons of Water.

[Escondido Advocate:] Escondido Valley has an eighty-goot rock-filled dam with a hundred-foot base, built in 1894, and which has stood the test of years, behind which is annually impounded 1,500,000,000 gallons of water, owned absolutely, and belonging to the lands of the valley. This system was constructed under the Wright Irrigation Law at an expense of $350,000, but the bonded debt proved so burdensome upon the people that they last season bought up the bonds, by levying an equalized assessment against all lands in the irrigation district, although it required 43 per cent. of the total assessed valuation to take up the bonds, the people willingly paid the money and the irrigation district was then disorganized by an order of court and the Escondido Mutual Water Company was organized to take its place, and certificates of stock issued to the assessment payers, a share of stock being issued for each dollar paid in on the assessment. So that instead of operating under the Wright Irrigation Law, the system is now owned and operated by the Escondido Mutual Water Company, composed of people of the valley, each property owner owning stock in the company in proportion to the amount paid on the assessment, and the water is now the property of the land holders without one dollar of indebtedness against it.

The water for this system is taken from the flood waters of the San Luis Rey River, the largest stream in the county, and which furnishes a never failing supply, and is conducted through cement ditches and flumes, a distance of fifteen miles, to the storage reservoir, six miles distant and 700 feet above the valley, and from there conducted to the valley through ditch, flume and pipe lines as it is needed for irrigating or domestic uses.

The original plan contemplated a dam 110 feet in height, which would impound many times more water than at present, and the great possibilities of the system can be realized when it is shown that only an additional ten feet to the present height of the dam the impoundment of water will be sufficient to furnish perpetual power for lighting the city and furnishing power for pumping plants throughout the surrounding valleys to pump for irrigating purposes, then this whole section will bloom as a rose, and teem with a prosperous and contented people.

These possibilities of the Escondido water system are not overdrawn, nor is its development an impossibility. It will require only a few thousand dollars to add ten feet to the height of our massive dam, which has stood the test of a decade. Then the necessary outlay for an electric plant will furnish a never-ceasing and extremely cheap power for lighting, pumping and other uses.

Nor is there any truth in the persistent rumor that H. H. Rogers is to assume editorship of Puck, nor in the report that E. H. Harriman will take charge of Judge.

PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

Inspectors in the health department have made reports tending to show that Los Angeles affords an excellent market for phony meat products; the Health Officer favors a more stringent ordinance.

The wire clipping crew in the street department has suspended operations in order to give the utility companies an opportunity to remove overhead wires from the conduit district.

A week's additional time has been accorded by the Council to the Electrician and the Gas Inspector for filing their reports on the approximate cost of delivering gas and electric light to urban consumers.

Excitement prevails among the students at Occidental in consequence of a suit brought by Ferris S. Hafford, erstwhile secretary of the institution, against Mrs. Ewart. An unpaid board bill is at the bottom of the trouble.

The $2000 estate of the late Elizabeth Burkhardt dribbled out for five years until all the money is eaten up. Judge Gibbs will inquire into the circumstances.

AT THE CITY HALL.

UNRIPE VEALS IN FRICASSEE.

PHONY MEATS ROUSE IRE OF HEALTH OFFICER.

Inspectors Say This is Distributing Point for Second-class Products. Seagull Tamales, Counterfeit Steaks and "Quaker" Hams—Dr. Powers's Remedy.

"If I remain in this office for another year I shall turn vegetarian in self-defense," exclaimed Assistant Health Officer Garcelon in deep disgust yesterday morning, after listening to the complaint of a hash-house habitue about the substitution of unripe veal for young fowl in chicken fricassee.

Prevailing prices are such that it is almost as profitable to counterfeit flesh or fowl as the coin of the realm, and the work is not likely to become nearly so confining.

Phony pork steaks and seagull tamales we have always with us; but some of the new substitutes are almost beyond belief.

Health inspectors assert that Los Angeles has become a regular distributing point for "second-class" meat.

Health Officer Powers says that a great deal of the trouble is occasioned by the failure of the city to provide a public abattoir and a corps of municipal inspectors. For ten years Dr. Powers has labored to educate the people to the point where they will rise and demand that all animals killed inside the city limits for meat shall be slain at a municipal slaughter-house and under the most strict supervision by the health authorities.

"At least 30,000 cattle, 60,000 hogs and 20,000 sheep are killed annually in or near Los Angeles," said Dr. Powers yesterday morning. "This meat is all for urban consumption; but not one-fourth of it is inspected by either city or Federal inspectors before it is placed on sale in the meat markets. I drop in at some of the slaughter-houses when the opportunity offers and catch some of the unfit meat; I would go much oftener if my other work would permit. From what I detect in my periodical visits I am convinced thta large quantities of unfit meat are offered for sale here.

"My inspectors do the best they can, but the way the slaughter-houses are scattered makes it impossible for them to do much.

"Last year we condemned ninety-two calves that had been prepared for the market. This was only a very small per cent., no doubt, of the actual number of unfit calves offered for sale by local butchers.

"There are some men here who apparently make a business of getting poor meat and offering it for sale as the first-class article. Let a dairyman announce that he has two or three sick cows, and he will receive offers at once from illegitimate butchers to purchase the animals. I have known of cases where calves and even cows have been dressed for the market after dying from some disease or injury.

"Only a short time ago I received a call over the telephone from a German resident of the Eighth Ward.

"'Doctor,' he called, 'I tink you better come down here. My neighbor, the butcher, is going to sell a calf that died before he killed it already.'

"I investigated and found that the German was right. The butcher was fined $40, but it was not enough to make him give up the practice of handling bad meat."

The addition of a veterinary surgeon to the staff of the Health Officer has helped considerably to reduce the amount of unfit meat offered for sale here, but, in the opinion of the Health Officer, a great deal yet remains to be done. The veterinary devotes the most of his time to looking after the dairy herds. Some of his discoveries are almost enough to make one abstain from both meat and milk.

The Health Officer and his inspectors are now gathering data to be used in the compilation of a new ordinance affecting the quality of meat offered for sale here. They hope to secure legislation which will permit them to forbid the sale of "second-class" meat.

This "second-class" meat includes meat that has been bruised in the shipment or in killing, and that is really unfit for table use. Yet the credulity of the average housewife is such that she purchases a great deal of this second-class stuff under the delusion that she is securing meat of extra quality.

Selling second-class meat has developed into a regular industry here. The health inspectors are now trailing a couple of house-to-house retailers who are selling second-class hams under the guise of country-smoked and cured meat. The hams they purchase from he big packing-houses here; they are the bruised or damaged ones that have not arrived here in good condition.

These hams the fakers take out into the country and treat to some kind of curing process, sometimes only a treatment with a chemical preparation which makes the outside look like country-cured ham.

Carrying out the delusion the faker goes about the streets in a countryfied rig. With him rides a woman wearing a Quaker bonnet. The meat is offered for sale as the product of their own ranch out near Burbank.

The health inspectors have been following one of these outfits for several days, but they have not yet found any of the meat bad enough to enable them to secure a conviction under the present ordinance.

"It is one of the boldest fakes that has come under my observation," said Dr. Powers yesterday, "my next door neighbor bought three of the hams under the impression that they were getting meat of extra quality. I would like to see our ordinances so amended that we could drive these fakers from the streets."

City Chemist Miller is making a number of meat tests. It is possible that some of the substitutions are so flagrant that convictions can be secured under the present ordinances.

The City Chemist has also compiled some interesting data in regard to sewage irrigated vegetables.

ASK FOR TIME.

REPORTS NOT READY.

City Electrician Manahan and Gas Inspector Jordon have asked for more time in which to make their reports on the approximate cost of supplying gas and light to urban residents by the big utility companies.

A Council order adopted a week ago directs that these reports be filed tomorrow. Expressing a willingness to give the inspectors ample time the Council has agreed to postpone the date of reporting one week.

These reports and the statements furnished by the utility companies will furnish the basis for establishing a municipal rate for gas, electric and telephone service. It will be the first time such a rate has ever been established here, although the city for years regulated the water rates.

Awaiting Orders.

No wires were clipped yesterday by the nipper brigade in the Street Department. Deputy Woodis says that he is awaiting further instructions from the City Attorney. Friday all the overhead wires crossing Hill street between First and Seventh streets were cut by the Street Department crew. It was the beginning of a movement to clear the wires from the conduit district. Unless immediate steps are taken by the utility companies to remove the overhead wires on Spring street and Broadway these thoroughfares will receive a visitation from the nipper crew.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

SORRY END OF BOARDING CLUB.

ORGANIZING PROFESSOR'S GOODS AND CHATTELS HELD.

Hafford, Once of Occidental, Sues Landlady Who Hangs on for Payment of Bill, While She Brings Action for Feeding and Keeping Him, Also for Storage of His Goods.

Ferris S. Hafford, erstwhile professor at Occidental College and one of the secretaries of that institution, is confronted with a difficulty that to date he has not been able to surmount.

He owes a $40 board bill and his library and personal paraphernalia have been detained by his landlady pending a settlement. But there is a question of college etiquette involved in what is also a mater of business, and Hafford has refused to pay. Indeed, he has gone further and has begun suit against Mrs. S. E. Ewart to recover his property. Barker and Bowen have filed an answer in which they ask judgment for the $40, and an extra $10 for storage of goods.

Hafford is supposed to be studying for the ministry, and for a time was teaching school at Long Beach. When he joined Occidental College, he suggested to some of the students that they eat and sleep on the consolidation plan. In other words, form a boarding club, and obtain board and lodging for the crowd at rebate prices.

The plan appealed to a number of the students and Hafford engineered the club idea. The pretty bungalow of Mrs. Ewart was selected as a highly desirable place for the club to hang out its shingle, and negotiations were opened with Mrs. Ewart, who is the widow of a minister.

The deal was made by which the club members were to be boarded for the modest sum of $20 each, and Hafford both boarded and roomed at the house. As time went on friction developed and in the end Prof. Hafford's connection with the college was severed. When he was about to remove from his boarding place he was $40 shy in his payments. Mrs. Ewart held on to his goods and chattels.

Hafford maintains that these include a library of about four hundred volumes, besides a stove, trunk, pictures, lamp and gymnastic apparatus that are also of great value to him.

Mrs. Ewart is of the opinion that the truck is not worth more than $10 at the outside.

But that is just where the hitch comes in. Hafford, who is going to conduct his own case in Justice Young's court, has some sort of defense to the effect that inasmuch as he was the agent in organizing the club, and taking so much good trade to the boarding house, he was to have a rebate of such proportions as would wipe out his board bill altogether.

ELTON A BANKRUPT.

EXAMINATION TO BE HELD.

Attorney Hugh J. Crawford has broken the deadlock in the affairs of ex-Chief of Police Charles Elton, who is still a boarder at the County Jail.

Yesterday the attorney presented a petition to Judge Trask embodying the statements of Elton made under oath that he is a bankrupt, and desires an examination under the section of the code providing for bankrupt persons. He sets out that it is not within his power to pay the $605 arrears of maintenance due to his wife and children, nor has he voluntarily and contumaciously disabled himself from being able to comply with the order of the court. On the ground of his inability to pay the money he asks for his discharge from imprisonment.

Judge Trask made the necessary order for the examination, which is to be held on February 23 before Judge Conrey. Inasmuch as Judge Conrey heard the whole case against Elton and was satisfied, he said, that Elton was not dealing in a straightforward way, he refused to sign the habeas-corpus writ. Now, however, under a special provision of the code, the matter muGst be gone into again.

ESTATE FADES AWAY.

COSTLY ADMINISTRATION.

Tomorrow the matter of the estate of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Burkhardt will come up before Judge Gibbs for final distribution, but as there is only about $174.30 on hand to distribute, it is probable that the court will desire to have certain questions answered before the order is made.

Mrs. Burkhardt conducted the Berlin lodging-house at No. 142 South Broadway, and was thrown from a street car and died on June 25, 1901. She left a child, E. J. Burkhardt, who has resided with his grandfather, Charles Whalen, at San Francisco. There being no other close relative, letters of special administration were granted to Public Administrator C. G. Kellogg, and later on Peter W. Whalen was appointed as administrator.

The lodging-house was sold for $600, subject to a mortgage of $292.50, and the furniture for $350. Under an order from the court a compromise was made with the street-car company for $1750, and, apart from personal effects, these sums of money constituted the estate. Altogether the receipts aggregated about $2408. Though a list of disbursements has been filed, no such sum as the above has been accounted for, though the administrator confesses that the balance in his hands amounts to only $174.30.

It may be that every cent of the estate has been properly disbursed, but if so the court is entitled to have the showing made in proper form on paper. If the expenditures have been properly made, then the case is merely another illustration of the fact that has been adverted to in court on several occasions—that the expenses of administration of a small estate are far more proportionately than in the case of a large estate, and are an unjust burden on the very persons who are least able to afford the money.

To all intents it appears that practically all of the money in the estate has been expended in administration while the insignificant case has been dribbled for years through the courts.

ACCUSES UNCLE.

NIECE WANTS INHERITANCE.

Because Mrs. Lola M. Hoover wouldn't think a little for herself she claims to have been defrauded out of some property, and is now asking the courts for relief. She has begun an action against Oscar McLain individually and also as administrator of the estate of the late Eliza E. McLain.

Mrs. McLain died on May 4, 1904, and among the persons inheriting was Mrs. Hoover, a niece. About the month of June, 1904, Mrs. Hover claims her uncle explained that in order to expedite matters it would be well if she would make over her interest in certain property to him, and in that way she would receive her share of the estate much quicker. He also intimated that it would be wise not to tell even her husband. Mrs. Hoover signed a deed.

In May of last year McLain is alleged to have induced her to sign a second deed. Recently, it is averred, her uncle told her she had no interest whatever in the estate of her aunt.

Now Mrs. Hoover wants the court to unravel the tangle. She asks that the deeds signed by her be declared void and canceled, and if it be held that her uncle holds the property represented by these deeds in trust for herß that he be removed on the ground of incompetency for the reason that he is addicted to intoxicants, of limited education and without business experience.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

PARKER MUST PAY. Judge Conrey has adjudged that Orlando Parker must pay to Frank Roney something over $600 as damages for throwing him out of his office and injuring his ear. The sum of $500 is awarded as damages, $100 punitive damages, and $10 for expenses.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY. The Southern California Horticultural Society has incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000, of which $15 has been subscribed. The directors are: W. Raymond, Pasadena; J. E. Morley, J. W. Walters, F. H. Howard, T. H. Wright and E. H. Rush, all of Los Angeles.

SUIT REVIVED. The old plaint of C. Henne against J. B. Lankershim is again in the courts. Henne complains that the defendant broke a contract with him by raising the Lankershim building and using the party wall so that he cannot raise his building as he desires. The court is asked to hold that he has been damaged to the extent of $14,500, and that the top stories of the Lankershim building must come down so that the party wall may be used in common.

DERRICK LAW VOID.

In Test Case, Justice Chambers Declares Unconstitutional Ordinance Ordering Their Removal.

When Justice Chambers declared the oil-derrick ordinance to be unconstitutional yesterday, the Second Ward people realized that they had killed the goose that laid the golden egg.

As had been expected, Justice Chambers knocked out the ordinance and released Walter L. Young, who was selected as the victim for the test case. Other oil men charged will not be tried.

By those in the "know" it was well enough understood all the time that the oil-derrick ordinance would not hold water; frankly, it was put up more as a bluff than anything else. Under its provisions, Oil Inspector Blackmar was gradually getting rid of the oil derricks, having torn out several hundred.

The Second Ward got ambitious, however, to clean them all out at one fell swoop and this test case resulted, the oil men getting their backs up.

Justice Chambers took the ground that the State gives the city the right to enact legislation affecting the public safety, the public morals or the public health. Old oil derricks affect none of these, he held.

UGLY CHARGE AGAINST FATHER.

On complaint of his wife, a warrant issued for F. Carlu, a painter, yesterday. Mrs. Carlu claims that her husband went home drunk and beat her, then beat their 8-year-old daughter and threw them both out of the house.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

PETITION AGAINST REGULATION

SOLDIERS' HOME, Feb. 17.—An article quoted as having originated with the Leavenworth (Kan.) Times, which is going the rounds of newspaperdom, is, if regarded seriously, apt to be productive of mischief among unthinking veterans who are, or may become, members of the National Home.

The article in question states that a petition numerously signed by members of the western branch (new Leavenworth) and other branches, having for its object a request that $8 per month "ration commutation" be allowed to members of the Home while on furlough, has been forwarded to various Congressmen, and members of this (Pacific branch) are urged to join in the appeal by petition to their already overburdened Congressmen.

All of this—though how it is possible within Home regulations—may have taken place; but it is believed to be more probable that Congressmen thus appealed to will scarcely consider the question with any degree of seriousness—that is, unless they are unfamiliar with statutes pertaining to the National Home.

Section 4835, Revised Statutes, provides: "All members of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be subject to the rules and articles of war, and in the same manner as if they were in the army."

Section 175, regulations of National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers repeats the article; one of the "articles of war" prohibits petitions on the part of members of the army; rules and regulations governing the Pacific branch N. H. D. V. S., expressly prohibits the "circulation of petitions." Thus it will be seen that members undertaking to promote a petition of the character indicated, would do so in violation of regulations.

In the "application for admission," a document to which every applicant for membership subscribes, under oath, is the following: . . . "and said applicant further stipulates and agrees that he will abide by and obey all the rules and regulations made by the board of managers, or by their order."

Gen. La Grange, when seen in reference to the article referred to, said: "My duties as governor of this branch requires that I shall see that the laws and regulations prescribed by the board of managers are obeyed. Veterans cannot exercise their 'right of petition' as citizens without first divesting themselves of their obligations as members of the Soldiers' Home."

Liquozone by What It Does. The First Bottle Is Free

It is not our practice to publish testimonials on Liquozone. We prefer to buy the first bottle, and let the product itself prove its power. A simple test will do more to convince you than any argument or claims. We ask you to learn, at our expense, what this wonderful product means to you.

If you are sick, use Liquozone to get well, as millions have done. Learn what it does that other remedies have not accomplished. If you are well, use it to keep well, to ward off germ attacks and as an invigorant.

What Liquozone Is.

The virtues of Liquozone are derived solely from gases, by a process requiring large apparatus, and from 8 to 14 days' time. No alcohol, no narcotics are in it. Chemists of the highest class direct the making. The result is to obtain from these harmless gases a powerful tonic-germicide.

The great value of Liquozone lies in the fact that it is deadly to germs, yet harmless to you. Germs are of vegetable origin; and this gas-made product, when absorbed by them, stops their activities. We publish an offer of $1000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. But to the body Liquozone is exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying. It is helpful in the extreme.

That is its main distinction. Common germicides are poisons when taken internally. That is why medicine proves so nearly helpless in a germ disease. Liquozone is a tonic.

We Paid $100,000

For the American rights to Liquozone, after hundreds of tests had been made with it. After its power had been demonstrated, again and again, in the most difficult germ diseases. Then we spent, in two years, more than ten times that sum to let others test it at our expense. The result is that millions of people, scattered everywhere, have shared in the benefits of this invention.

We make the same offer to you. We ask you to prove, at our cost, how much this product means to you. Let Liquozone itself show how wrong it is to suffer from a trouble that it cures.

Germ Diseases.

Most of our sickness has, in late years, been traced to germ attacks. The list of known germ diseases now numbers about one hundred.

Some germs—as in skin troubles—directly attack the tissues. Some create toxins, causing such troubles as Rheumatism, Blood Poison, Kidney Disease and nerve weakness. Some destroy vital organs, as in Consumption. Some—like the germs of Catarrh—create inflammation; some cause indigestion. Directly or indirectly, nearly every serious ailment is a germ result. Such diseases call for Liquozone—not drugs, which can't kill germs.

Every germ attack, no matter what its symptoms, calls for a germicide. The mildness of Liquozone makes some of its results seem almost incredible. But in that mildness lies its power. And that germ diseases need. Any diseases which have resisted medicine for years often yield at once to it.

50c. Bottle Free.

If you need Liquozone, and have never tried it, please send us this coupon. We will then mail you an order on a local druggist for a full-size bottle, and will pay the druggist ourselves for it. This is our free gift, made to convince you; to let the product itself show you what it can do. In justice to yourself, please accept it today, for it places you under no obligation whatever.

Liquozone costs 50c and $1.

Ten years ago a reputable dentist of Virginia told me that a certain molar tooth could not be satisfactorily saved, and that it would probably not be of service for one year. It has not only served me for ten years, as Dr. Schiffman saved and crowned it, and comparatively speaking, without pain. I sing his praise.
OWEN M. ANDREWS,
Pastor M. E. Church, South, Cor. 6th and Mateo sts.

It gives me great pleasure to state that Dr. Schiffman extracted an impacted wisdom tooth for me, which had been giving me great annoyance for years. It was extracted absolutely without a particle of pain to me. It was easily worth 100 times the amount paid.
ROBERT MARSH,
Of Robert Marsh & Co., 302-303 H. W. Hellman Bldg.

On account of some unfortunate experience I had in the extraction of my teeth I became a great coward in this respect. Today Dr. Schiffman extracted one of my very refractory teeth without causing me one particle of pain. D. K. TRASK, Judge Superior Court, Los Angeles.

I have been treated by Dr. Schiffman for years. I have tried all his different methods, and can say unhesitatingly no dentist or physician has ever operated with such success or skill. In extracting my teeth he did it without any pain to me. It is a great pleasure to me to recommend him and his method of treatment.
MILO M. POTTER,
Prop. Van Nuys Hotel, L. A., and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

Several years ago Dr. Schiffman did some crown work for me which has proven entirely satisfactory. The work was done painlessly and with great skill. It gives me great pleasure to recommend him.

Flexible Rubber Dental Plates

Have many advantages over the old thick, cumbersome, ordinary rubber plates, and even over gold plates, being much lighter and thinner. These plates are flexible, only a trifle thicker than heavy writing paper, fit closer and adhere better to the roof of the mouth. Particles of food and small seeds cannot get under them. They will last longer, are stronger than any others, and will not break, as they will give first, being flexible. Dr. Schiffman's own process, and made only by us.

BARRIE HELPS A BROTHER.

He Assists Novelist to Get Elected to Parliament.

Emanuel, Like Mark Twain, Denies That He is Dead.

Hume Has Seven New Novels Ready for Publication.

[STAFF CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Jan. 24.—Probably the Parliamentary election in this country which is now coming to an end will go down to fame as one of the most "literary" on record. With the single exception of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, the entire collection of authors who offered themselves as candidates were triumphantly elected, and no doubt the creator of "Sherlock Holmes" would have got in, too, had he not allied himself with what proved to be the unpopular side. As it was, however, he was soundly beaten by an eminent barrister named Shaw.

Incidentally the electoral contest has called attention to the close friendship which exists between J. M. Barrie and the author of "Miranda of the Balcony," A. E. W. Mason, who has just been elected to Parliament as the representative of Coventry. Both novelists are keen Liberals, and at the beginning of Mason's campaign Barrie accompanied his friend to the Coventry district ,and remained with him all through the fight, even stopping to see the votes counted and to hear Mason's election announced. Moreover, Mr. Barrie gave Mason his moral support in every way possible. He drew the line at actual "canvassing," it is true—he is much too retiring by temperament to shine as an election "worker"—but he sat on the platform at practically every one of Mason's meetings and generally backed his fellow-novelist up from start to finish. Probably he thoroughly enjoyed it, for his interest in politics is said to be almost as keen as that which he takes in fairies, and it has been rumored several times that he would come forward as a candidate for Parliament. So perhaps Mason will be able to reciprocate later on.

Meanwhile it seems that besides the five novelists—Messrs. Parker, Mason, Churchill, Belloc and Vivien, who will sit in Parliament, the publishing trade will also be represented; another victor in the election being Frank Newnes, who has been returned for Nottinghamshire. A Liberal, he is the only son of Sir George Newnes and a director in the famous publishing firm which issues the "Strand" and "Wide World" magazines, "Tit-Bits" and countless other publications.

Walter Emanuel, author of "A Dog Day," which set all England laughing, and who, among other things, writes that notable Charivaria column in Punch, has a grievance. One of the society publications in New York recently reported him as being dead, but in telling me about it yesterday he appeared very much alive indeed. Mr. Emanuel has written the editor of the periodical a letter which he was kind enough to let me see. Here it is:

"Dear Sir: In your issue of the 28th ult., you refer to my book, "A Dog Day,' as being by 'the late Walter Emanuel." As this intimation of my death is apt to cause unnecessary pleasure to my friends, will you kindly deny it. I am still alive—some people have no sense of duty. Excuse more, but I am just off to join the Anti-Premature Burial Society.

"Yours truly,

"WALTER EMANUEL."

Mr. Emanuel tells me that he is now writing another book on dogs, which, like the first, will be illustrated by Cecil Aldin. It is probable that it will be published in England and America simultaneously.

Fergus Hume, who has been down in Cornwall putting the finishing touches to seven new novels, has returned to his home near London, energetic as ever, and ready for seven more.

There have been so many tragedies of late in connection with books—so many suicides committed to call attention to books, and so many distressful happenings over books that failed to attract attention to themselves—that it is pleasant to be able to tell of a charming romance that never would have happened if it had not been for a recently-published volume of essays. Perhaps, on the whole, it would be more correct to say if a certain newspaper article had not been published, for this it was that really started the business. Eustace Miles wrote the article in question. He is the expert on exercise and diet, and in his article he declared that the way to be happy was to appear happy, and said much more on the same subject. That article was read by Miss Hallie Killick, a young authoress who belongs to a little coterie of literary folk at Westgate, and it inspired her to write the book of essays above referred to, which she called "Life's Orchestra," and of which she sent a copy to Mr. Miles, explaining at the same time how it came to be written.

As it happened, the little work made a big hit. Among others to whom it appealed was Queen Alexandra, who carried it about with her everywhere, and read some parts of it to one of the young English princesses who was ill. Needless to say, the young authoress was encouraged to write another book, and when it was finished she wrote to Eustace Miles asking for his advice regarding a publisher. A short correspondence followed with the result that the athletic expert took a trip down to Westgate to see Miss Killick—and now, as the lady novelists say, "there are to be wedding bells." Meanwhile, Miss Killick's new book is nearly ready, and, I understand, is to be dedicated to her fiancé.

The American admirers of Rembrandt who are coming abroad this year should arrange to do so before the end of June, in which case they will be in time for the celebration of the tercentenary of the great artist's birth, which takes place in Holland in July. Leyden, where Rembrandt was born and spent nearly all his life, will be the scene of the chief ceremonies which will include the unveiling of a statue close to the house in which he first saw the light.

LORD'S ELECTION DUE TO HIS WIFE'S HELP.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Feb. 3.—That young Lord Dalrymple has emerged triumphant from the Liberal election flood which has swept away so many representatives of aristocratic names and broad acres who were Conservative candidates, is undoubtedly largely due to the influence of his charming wife. She canvassed and made speeches in his behalf all over Wigtonshire, displaying quite as much skill and considerably more enthusiasm than the host of practised politicians of the male persuasion who supported him. She is a good speaker, but she has a captivating way about her which proved far more effective than verbal arguments in winning votes. She is a pretty woman, tall, fair, with blue eyes, brown hair, most engaging manners and possessed of abundance of tact and "savoir faire." She was Miss Violet Harford, only daughter of Colonel and Mrs. Harford when in October 1904 she married the only son and heir of the Earl of Stair. Their married life commenced most inauspiciously. On their trip the bridegroom was stricken with scarlatina. The bride devoutly nursed him through his illness and it was hoped that she would herself escape the disease. But upon moving to the Riviera Lady Dalrymple was found to be suffering from a virulent form of the epidemic. Happily she recovered and speedily regained her former vigorous health.

Lord Dalrymple, who was born in 1879, is an officer in the Scots Guards and served with his regiment in the South African war. He is smart, good looking, a fine shot, a good all-round sportsman, and a good sort generally. Thus far he has given no indication that he will ever develop great qualities of statesmanship, but it is doubtful if their possession would contribute anything to the enjoyment he will get out of the goodly inheritance that will be his some day, for the Earl of Stair is one of the largest land owners in the west of Scotland, and possesses two castles—Lochinch Castle in Wigtonshire and Oxenford Castle near Edinburgh. He is the eleventh earl, but like many Scotsmen sets great store by his Nova Scotia baronetcy. At great functions he always wears the gold colored ribbon with the quaint badge of Nova Scotia which was granted to Scotch baronets in 1629. In 1880 as Lord Dalrymple, before he succeeded to the peerage, he contested the county in the Liberal interests, but was defeated in spite of name and family.

MOBING QUEEN COMING.

Italian Dowager Margaret Makes Final Preparations to Visit the United States in May.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—The report before published at different times that Dowager Queen Margaret of Italy will visit this country is again revived today in a dispatch from Rome to the World, which says that it has been definitely arranged that she shall start from Italy in May for an automobile tour in the United States. All the necessary arrangements have been made, a special machine seating six persons having been ordered at one of the most prominent Italian factories.

The dowager queen will be accompanied on her trip by Marquis Guissioli, her gentleman in waiting, and by the Countess of Villamarina and her daughter. Besides she will have a maid and a special chauffeur, who are just now busy studying the English language and the road maps of the United States.

The queen will come incognito under the name of Countess Stupinigi and has expressed her desire to go as far west as is possible. Her tour of the country will last several months.

CHAUTAUQUA PICNIC.

The Chautauqua County (N. Y.) Association held its second annual picnic and reunion yesterday at Eastlake Park. More than 130 former Chautauquans were present, many of whom reside in this city. Others were there from Pasadena, Pomona, Monrovia, Santa Monica, Long Beach, Huntington Beach, Covina and as far north as Seattle, while the tourists represented New York City, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis and many other eastern points. George Mason, president of the association, made a stirring address, a bountiful picnic table was spread on the shore of the lake under the trees, and the day passed most pleasantly, many unexpected meetings of old friends adding to its pleasure. At the suggestion of the president a fixed date was agreed upon for the anual picnic, which will hereafter meet on the second Saturday in February each year at Eastlake Park.

PASTOR'S FAREWELL.

He will continue these meetings for another week, and will then enter the general evangelistic work through Southern California.

NORTH DAKOTA PICNIC.

The local North Dakota people have had "hard luck" in so far as their picnic is concerned. Thrice have they fixed upon a date, and as many times have the clouds come along and turned on the rains to patter upon the grass and discourage basket lunches. Now the North Dakota residents and visitors will try again. They have set next Saturday as the time, and at 11 o'clock of that day, weather permitting, they will gather in Eastlake Park.

IRON WORKER'S FALL.

Losing his balance on some loose planking, P. Berners, an iron worker, fell twenty-five feet from the I. W. LOT, STOCK, JOB OFFERED YOU.

Fletcher, Well-known Promoter, Has New Scheme.

Tulare Land Shares in Cement Factory to be Built.

Backers' Names Not Public. Doesn't Like Newspapers.

Have you any money to invest? Do you want to own orange lands in Tulare county and stock in a wonderful cement and iron corporation with three great manufacturing plants (on paper) and become a resident and land owner in a town that is going to eclipse (in the minds and language of its promoters) anything that has yet been proposed for the public to put its money into? Also, let us not forget, do you want a job in a cement factory, one that isn't built yet, but will be in the sweet bye-and-bye, if you will only buy enough stock to start it—at least the promoters say in their glowing advertisements that it will.

If your answers to these questions are in the affirmative W. S. Fletcher, former druggist of Greenwood, B. C., since promoter of several companies, one of which was the now-defunct corporation that failed in operating mines in Arizona and the old Needles smelter, and in which many Angeleños risked their money, would like to meet you. When you go to his office in the Huntington building, assure him that you are not a newspaper man—he does not like notoriety and newspapers, he says—and he will tell you stories that will tempt you to shell out the coin quick and depart with stock and promise of a job rejoicing.

VAGUE "LINDCOVE."

Fletcher is a youngish man with a smooth tongue. The fact that he has dealt with some pretty bright and hard-headed business men goes to show that. Some weks ago he publicly launched this proposition by inserting two advertisements in the city papers. One announces that the "Lindcove Realty Company" has laid out a townsite in Tulare county on the new electric railroad from Exeter to Lemon Cove to be known as Lindcove, the other tells of the Cement and Iron Manufacturing Company. He will sell lots at $350 and will throw in five acres of fine orange lands as well. The latter is free—the offer distinctly says so. But this is not all. Listen to the experiences of a Times reporter who called upon Fletcher. Profiting by the adventures of a newspaper man who had preceded him on a similar errand and had been virtually ordered out of the office on announcing his mission, the scribe did not make known his vocation.

In the outer office—Fletcher has screened from the vulgar gaze in an inner sanctum sanctorum—sat a polite and smiling clerk who glibly told the visitor of the wonders of Lindcove. Not only would the company sell these lands mentioned above for $350, but it would throw in 750 shares of the Iron and Cement Manufacturing Company besides.

"You see these shares are selling in the office at $1 par value," the young man pleasantly explained. "We are so anxious to build up our town that we make this extraordinary offer."

"In other words," said the reporter, "this stock is sold separately for $1, and the 750 shares are worth $750, but you will sell them along with this fine land for $350?"

"Yes. You see—ahem—we—you know—we want to make a great city quickly. We don't want any long delay about it. We are rushing it along. Why, just think, we've only been open here about two weeks, and we've sold lots of land and stock."

"Now who is interested in this proposition? When investing one naturally likes to know who is backing an enterprise," said the reporter.

"Oh, we have several moneyed men. There is ample capital behind the enterprise. You need not fear about that," was the somewhat vague reply of Fletcher's understudy.

When pressed to give names, the young man referred the visitor to Mr. Fletcher, remarking that such men did not always care to be known as interested in their enterprices.

"Anyway," he added, "our stock is bonded so that you are fully protected." When pressed to explain his meaning, the young man said that title to the land was guaranted by a local trust company and that the contract stipulated that if the cement plant was not built the purchaser could demand his money back from Fletcher and his backers. The clerk enlarged upon the several fortunes his employer had made in mining. The chief venture in this, by the way, that is remembered here, is the now-defunct company that bought his name.

IN FLETCHER'S SANCTUM.

After some parleying the reporter was ushered into the presence of Mr. Fletcher. The latter explained his hesitancy in admitting his visitor by stating that he had been greatly annoyed by newspaper men.

"You know, they are really an awful bother," he said. "They just pester the life out of me, take my time and want to pull my leg for money. Why, just the other day there was one in here that I had quite a time with. He wanted to work me for a $100 write-up. So long as you are not a newspaper man I don't mind talking to you."

As a matter of fact, the newspaper man referred to went to the office for the entirely legitimate purpose of trying to learn something about the business methods by which stock is being sold to the dear public and was practically ordered out of the door. The reporter discreetly remained silent as to his occupation and allowed the promoter to talk.

When pressed for the names of those who are behind him, Fletcher named one M. E. Miller, whom, he said, is a wealthy capitalist interested in mining and other lines living in this city. The name does not appear in the city directory, by the way. Others, he said, were Messrs. Pillips and Evans of San Francisco and—oh, several others.

MANUFACTURING PLANTS?

According to the stories told by Fletcher and his understudy the Cement and Iron Manufacturing Company is to build three manufacturing plants, one near Sacramento, one at Lindcove and one at Glendale. None of these have actually materialized yet, but he is figuring on them and has let a contract, he says, for one—the one at Glendale. Just where this to be at Glendale he would not say. In his advertisement he says:

"In order to encourage the men who will work at this plant to own their own homes where this plant is located, an arrangement has been made with the Lindcove Realty Comnapy, whereby purchase of stock in the company will give them lots or lands free, or the purchase of lots or lands will enable them to own stock in this profit making enterprise free. This company will loan money to lot and landowners in Lindcove to build their homes, making especial terms to the working men in their plant that they may become permanent residents. Wages in the cement works will be first class."

FLETCHER'S PAST CAREER.

Business men who have had dealings with Fletcher in the past do not speak glowingly of him. In fact their words are a distinct warning to others. Through standard mercantile agencies his record has been looked up and shows that in the summer of 1897 he appeared in Greenwood, British Columbia, and purchased a drug business from one R. H. Taylor, which he conducted with apparent success until July, 1898, when he transferred his holdings to one M. E. Miller under circumstances that were severely criticised. There were several judgments against him and he left for the States. In 1899 he returned and engaged in saw-mill business in a small way in partnership with one Charles Goodhue. Later he left and came to California, leaving behind him, it is said, a number of gullible friends to mourn his departure.

It may be a mere coincidence, but it is worthy of note that the person to whom he transferred his drug store at the time of his troubles in British Columbia and the man whom he names as his chief backer in the land and cement factory deal should bear the same name—M. E. Miller.

TULARE LANDS GOOD.

The Times does not desire to convey the impression that any or all lands in Tulare county are not desirable. Many are, and there are several legitimate enterprises on foot in that and neighboring counties in which Los Angeles capital is heavily interested. Fletcher's lands may or may not be in this class, and his cement factory may or may not materialize, but the fact remains that his career is not such as to give the public confidence in him and his schemes, and his advertisements do not "look good" to conservative business men.

The cement company advertised by Fletcher has a prospectus out in which he claims to have large deposits of cement material and 2000 acres of iron deposits. The booklet does not state where these are located, but leaves the inference that they are near the site of the proposed factory. Figures are given to show expected profits of $15,000 to $45,000 a month. Other property named consists of 40,000 acres located somewhat in Nevada county on which are found, according to the prospectus, gold, silver, copper and cinnabar. In the prospectus there is no mention of the names of officers or persons interested in the concern. The clerk stated, however, that Fletcher is president.

The realty company has also a prospectus that describes the lands in glowing terms, and in connection with the agricultural prospects, dilates strongly upon the proposed cement factory and the advantages the town will ha evin the sweet by and by when that establishment is running. This prospectus also refrains from giving the name of a single backer or officer. In fact, as far as the public knows, Fletcher and his clerk, and perhaps Miller, are the whole thing.

Within the week in Bisbee the precipitation was nearly three inches of rain and five inches of snow. The railroad grades were softened and trains were delayed.

On the Nacozari branch of the Southwestern, a great landslide occurred, four miles north of Nacozari, as well as several serious washouts. Trains have been held up for several days and the track may not be cleared for a weeek. Out of Clifton the narrow gauge ore-road was washed out, possibly meaning a suspension of operations at the Arizona and Shannon smelters.

HURT BY BIG BOULDER.

While hunting mountain lion in the hills near Benson, John Lyon, a stockman, was caught by a rolling boulder, which knocked him over a cliff. In the fall his hip was badly crushed, but he managed to drag himself to his cabin, less than two miles away, the journey taking him thirty hours. There he remained alone for eight days, before a visitor brought help.

Lyon was taken to Benson for surgical aid and it is believed probable that he will recover. When the boulder struck him, he was on the point of shooting a mountain lion entering its den.

BISBEE AND VICINITY.

Holdup men are getting active in Bisbee. Several miners have been relieved of valuables while going home at night. One robbery of particular boldness was that of J. H. Coles, in the change-house of the Holbrook shaft, within a few feet of scores of men.

It has been decided that the Arizona Miners' Association will meet in Bisbee early in April. It is expected that several hundred representative mining men will be present from all over the Territory. The Association now has membership of over 1000.

SANTA ANA.

STRANGE WOMAN AGAIN.

SANTA ANA, Feb. 17.—The mysterious woman who has been figuring in the career of Embezzler Walker, made another appearance on the stage of action this morning just before the convicted man was starting for State's prison. She came in on the morning train, and made another plea with the Sheriff and District Attorney to be allowed to marry Walker, or Hazzard, before he was taken away. Her request was refused on the ground that the man, being a convicted felon, had lost all civil rights.

Although on her previous visits to Walker, the infatuated woman has always come from Los Angeles, today she came from Riverside, where, she says, she has been working for a couple of weeks past. She gave her name today as Anna Latham, but on previous occasions used another name.

Walker was taken on his journey north at 1 o'clock in charge of Deputy Wilson.

The Railroad and the Crook.

EVERY CORPORATION EMPLOYS A SECRET SERVICE ALL ITS OWN TO CIRCUMVENT THE SHIFTY GENTLEMAN.

By Guy T. Viskniskki.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

CURIOUSLY enough, the brothers Hart were special agents—but then also, they were triplets.

Dave Hart owned allegiance to the Great Western. John, who could boast of being Dave's junior by a good half hour, with monthly regularity drew an envelope from the Atlantic Central. Jimmy, so-called originally because he was the "kid" of the combination, diplomatically strove to make his services appear valuable to the C. & N. O.—short for Chicago & New Orleans.

Shortly before they had become special agents within a few months of one another, they had been municipal policemen. Former policemen who can show fair intelligence, combined with detective ability, and prove their good character, are favored of railroads as special agents. Every good policeman knows this, and makes a minute of the fact for possible future use. What more natural for the Hart boys, when they found themselves no longer members of "the force," to seek and find employment with the railroads, as already set forth? Natural, particularly in the light of the monotonous sameness with which each had lived and worked away thirty odd years of his life. Call it coincidence, if you will; the brothers and their friends had long ceased to exclaim at their parallel existence. They had come to look upon it as a sort of subtle punishment for daring to be triplets.

At any rate, here was Dave Hart, summoned before the Chief Special Agent of the Great Western, bright and early on the same morning that John and Jimmy had been called into the presence of their respective chiefs.

"Dave," said the C. S. A., with suppressed excitement, "there's been a hold-up in the cut this side of Flathead—you know the place. Was pulled off early this morning on No. 7, and they got more than we care to let the public know about. The Sheriff and his posse are scouring the country, but I want you to get out there and see if we can't get results this time."

'John,' said his C. S. A., with the drawl of a man telling an old tale for the hundredth time. "here's a fellow who claims that his right side was paralyzed by his being thrown violently about in one of our trains. He's put in a heavy claim for damages—entered suit, in fact. There's every reason, so far as I've been able to ascertain, to set him down as a faker. Get after him good and hard. This faking business is getting so prevalent that we want to make an example of the next fellow caught at it."

"Jimmy," said the C. S. A., with the patronizingly superior tone of a man who feels his responsibility, "I have—ah—been watching your work lately, and I—ah—have decided to assign you to our terminal, in the hope that you'll be able to nab the fellow who has been picking pockets there—ah."

AN ADVENTURE WITH COLLEGE BOYS.

Dave's first move was to interview the members of the train crew held up, and the passengers, when the train pulled into the station. John went straight from the official presence to loaf about the house of the suspected faker. Jimmy's first work in his new position was to stroll leisurely down the platform when he saw No. 14—the Pacific Express, popularly called—looming up at the far end of the train shed.

Though he had never before worked around the terminal, he was, nevertheless, acquainted with all the trainmen running into and out of it. Therefore, it did not surprise him in the least to catch sight of 14's conductor motioning to him as the train was gently sliding to a stop.

Jimmy was by the little czar's side in a jiffy.

"Well?" he queried; and got this reply:

"I'll point 'em out as they step off. Three college chaps raided the dining-car silver supply for souvenirs, and laughed at us when we asked 'em to shell out. There they are now," and the conductor indicated two cars down.

Jimmy confronted the hilarious group, whose pockets had failed to hide all the "souvenirs."

"Well, boys," he said, politely, "don't you think you'd better hand me those little trinkets?"

A healthy guffaw greeted him.

"You see," Jimmy went on, "I'm a special agent"—here he showed his badge of authority, conferred on him by the municipal authorities—"and you are good fellows, and—well, we don't want to make any scene, now, do we?"

The boys began to look a wee bit doubtful of their position. Jimmy read their feelings.

"That's right," he said, "please give me the silver."

And about the time when Dave was gleaning from highly conflicting stories that one lone man had held up the train, and John was unostentatiously tracking the "injured" man, being wheeled out for his daily airing, Jimmy was experiencing a veritable old-fashioned silver shower, to the ill-concealed amusement of the row of mulatto faces framed by the dining-car windows.

During the first three weeks that brothers Dave and John were busy on the trail of road agent and faker, Jimmy, besides keeping both eyes open for pickpockets, was called upon to perform the divers little duties that invariably fall to the lot of a special agent whose assignment is a terminal or station of any pretensions whatever.

Perhaps once a day it became his bounden duty to rouse a drunken man to a realization of the fact that his journey was over, and it was really necessary for him to let the company have the car. He ferreted out the parents of lost children. Whenever any one became too obstreperous while waiting for a train, it was Jimmy who warned him back to normal, or failing in that, turned him over to the mercy of a uniformed policeman. He listened to victims' description of the man they dimly suspected of robbing them, knowing all the while that it was time wasted. But then, truth to tell, beyond the worry caused him by the elusive pickpocket, Jimmy's work was not of the strenuous sort, exactly and he had plenty of time on his hands.

Jimmy was beginning to despair of ever landing his man when he gave a patient ear to a portly gentleman's clear description of a man who had severely jostled him, the said portly gentleman discovering a minute or two after the incident had occured that he was minus both watch and well-filled pocketbook. Thereafter Jimmy looked hard for a clean-shaven man, slight of stature, with a student's bend to his back and rather shaggy eyebrows for one not over 30.

RUNNING DOWN ROAD AGENT.

This was close to the time that John, who had found his case the most puzzling that had ever fallen to his lot, began to think that perhaps his road was in error in suspecting his man. But he was not yet ready so to report, and in order to watch the man in his own home, if possible, John rented a flat directly opposite the suspect's, and that same day he and his wife quietly and temporarily changed their place of residence.

Dave, meantime, had been genially loafing about Flathead, hoping to secure even a slight clew that might lead to the apprehension of the bold road agent.

Now there had come to the town some six months before, a gentlemanly sort of tenderfoot from somewhere in the East. He had sought out Flathead, presumably, that the state of his health might be improved. He lived alone in a shanty of the open-air sort on the edge of town. When Dave Hart struck Flathead the easterner was busily engaged in long talk concerning the bold road agent and his feat. The man persisted in discussing the road-agent days after the rest of Flathead was ready to fall back on the weather again. Indeed, it was this little circumstance that led Dave furtively to keep his eyes on the easterner, after having listened for about three weeks to his one song, rendered numerous times.

Events now moved rapidly with the triplets. Jimmy discovered one afternoon, as he was sauntering through the waiting-room, that there really existed a man who answered fairly well the description given him by the portly gentleman bereft of watch and roll. He was greatly overjoyed, but saddened when the suspected one left the terminal without having committed any untoward deed. Nevertheless, Jimmy looked sharp continually for the man to reappear. Sure enough, he was back again within the week. This time he displayed his true colors. Jimmy beheld him doing so, and before the man could squirm to oblivion in the crush, Jimmy's hand was on his shoulder, and it was all over but the testifying in court later on.

Dave sinuously cultivated a thick acquaintance with the loquacious health seeker. After a time the latter came to confide in Dave, and little remarks that he let fall led Dave to take matters in his own hands on a certain night, and search the open-air shanty when its occupant was absent.

What Dave found there in the shape of poorly-secreted rifled mail caused him first to seek out the Sheriff, who lived in Flathead. Together they pursued their way to the saloon usually frequented by the easterner. There he was found in the company of several town characters, boring them, as usual, with his talk about the road agent.

Dave and the Sheriff permitted the man to ramble on for some time. At last even Dave, elated though he was with his success, wearied of the situation.

"There is your road agent, Sheriff," he announced, so that all could hear, and pointed at the easterner. "Arrest him."

Of course the surprise was great, even for Flathead, accustomed to all sorts of strange happenings from the placing of its foundations, which occurred simultaneously with the opening up of the mines on which it lived. But Dave had made no mistake, as some of the miners, with the taste of the accused man's liquor still lingering on their tongues, were all but ready to take up arms to prove. Indeed, after he had experienced several weeks of prison fare, the accused man realized that the jig was up, and when brought before the court freely confessed that he had come to Flathead for the express purpose of holding up No. 10, which he, as a former employé of the road, knew to carry a large sum of money East daily. He had been shrewd enough to ingratiate himself with all Flathead before holding up the train; and if a queer trick of mind had not caused him to babble at length about his own handiwork, he would probably have got back home with the booty, leaving the identity of the road agent forever a mystery.

HOW THE FAKER WAS UNDONE.

John Hart patiently sat by night, for a matter of two weeks, at the window of the flat he had rented. On the night that his quest came to an end the gas was lighted as usual in the flat across the way, but for some reason or other the curtains were not pulled down prior to the act, as was customary. Nor, stranger still, were they pulled down afterward, so that John, looking through his glass, finally caught the faker off his guard, dancing a jig to the music of a piano played by his wife.

John thoughtfully had his wife view the little scene; then he stole away to a telephone. A few days later the faker was arrested charged with perjury, he having sworn that he was hopelessly paralyzed on his right side.

"By the way," said John's chief after he had formally received the former's report, "here's a fellow who had us bill half a carload of flour for him to a customer of his in Nestoria. The blamed stuff's got lost somewhere. See if you can locate it quick and so stop the everlasting kicking at both ends."

"Yes," said Dave's chief, "'twas a good piece of work. I daresay you read about the freight smash-up at Tornah today? Well, get right out there and see what you can find out about the cause of it, and report back as soon as possible, for I want you to investigate a rather important claim just put in for three lost trunks. The general superintendent is anxious to have quick reports on both these matters. He's the man we fellows have got to please, you know."

"Got him dead to rights, didn't you, Jimmy?" complimented the "kid's" superior. "Now you're to try your hand on the car thieves who've been making life miserable for us at Granton. The town's got only two or three cops; they're not worth their salt, anyway; the yard's pretty well off from everywhere, and it's a fine field for the scoundrels. Jones hasn't been able to catch anbody, though he's been there six weeks. So you go down there, and I'll transfer him to the terminal yards. They're in no danger of being robbed, what with the city cops all about and the drilling of cars and all that going on day and night. So long, and good luck, Jimmy. And, by the way, don't let any of those fellows put a bullet hole through you, as some of their sort did several years ago to a friend of mine with the Oak Leaf."

AN HEIRLESS THRONE.

Speculations as to the Probable Successor of Emperor Kwangsu—Who Will Get the Crown?

[New York Tribune:] Of all the monarchies of the Old World there is but one which is at the present moment without any heir whatsoever to the throne, namely, that of China. True, there are a number of sovereigns in Europe who are childless, such as for instance, the Queen of the Netherlands, the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, the King of Bavaria and the King of Roumania. But in each instance provision has been made for the descent of the crown to one or another of their relatives, who is recognized as heir apparent. But China has for several years past been without any heir to the crown, and absolutely no provision exists at the present moment for the succession in the event of the sudden death of Emperor Kwangsu.

As the marriage which he contracted fifteen years ago has remained without issue, a young cousin, Prince Putsun, was adopted by the Emperor and proclaimed in 1900 as heir apparent to the crown. But the child in question had the misfortune to be a son of Prince Tuan of Boxer insurrection fame, and owing to the prominent part which Tuan took in the rebellion, his little boy was excluded in 1901 from all rights of succession to the throne, and the decree of the child's adoption by the Emperor rescinded.

In order to remedy the condition of affairs created by this step the old Empress Dowager, who is all powerful, the Emperor being a mere obedient and passive instrument in her hands, has ordered that all eligible Princes shall be presented at the imperial palace this month. She will select three or four of the brightest of the boys, will keep them with her for a year or two, and will then nominate one of them as the Emperor's successor and adopted son, a nomination which the Emperor will immediately ratify by means of a proclamation. The eligible Princes are restricted to those belonging to the generation nearest the throne, but of a generation below that to which the Emperor belongs.

The Emperor himself is an adopted child. In fact, the succession of the Chinese throne, at any rate in modern times, has very rarely passed direct from father to son.

DRUNKENNESS IN EUROPE.

The Country That Drinks the Most Not Necessarily the Most Besotted. Warm Countries Sober.

[Harper's Weekly:] The countries that drink the most are not necessarily the most drunken, and statistics of consumption are a poor guide to the degree of a nation's intemperance. On paper the greatest drinkers in the world are the French, yet France is a notoriously temperate country. Her statistics of police drunkenness are less than one-fourth the English record. Before the phyllipera ravaged the vines and led to spirit-drinking, the French probably held the palm for sobriety among European peoples. Italy, Spain and Portugal, being wine-growing and wine-drinking countries, have large statistics of consumption, but are, as a matter of fact, exceedingly temperate. Northern Russia, Scandinavia and Scotland are the most drunken parts of Europe, though the consumption of alcohol per head is comparatively low.

Climate and race have much to do in determining such matters. A warm country is naturally a sober and usually a gambling country. A raw, dull and damp climate predisposes to indulgence. Thus the northern counties of England are more drunken than the southern, Scotland is more drunken than England.

But I do not suppose that any one will be inclined to accept the English drink bill as a proof of national virility. For the past ten years this country has spent on drink from $875,000,000 to $950,000,000 a year. Its average annual expenditure on drink amounts, therefore, to a sum that is more than the entire annual revenue, that is equal to all the rents of all the houses and farms in the kingdom, and that is only a little less than the cost of the South African War. Nearly five-eighths of this goes in beer, about a third in spirits and one-thirteenth in wine. The expenditure per head, on the basis of the whole population, works out at a little over $21 per annum; but it is reckoned that there are in the United Kingdom nearly 3,000,000 abstainers and about 14,000,000 children under the age of fifteen. Deducting these, the number of actual consumers is estimated at 24,000,000, whose annual expenditure per head thus comes to over $35. It is also calculated that the English working-class family spends almost one-sixth of its income on liquor.

Mark Twain and Artemus Ward.

In talking of his lecture on Artemus Ward, Mark Twain told the secretary of his trouble in finding a fitting climax to his famous story of Ward's encounter with a "railroad bore"—a species that he particularly detested—who took the seat beside him in a car on a journey to Washington, shortly after the close of the war. Artemus was engaged in reading, and in no mood for conversation. But the bore was not to be balked. "Say," he observed to his victim, "d'ye think Grant'll get the nomination for President?" Artemus looked up from his book (according to Twain,) gazed curiously at the stranger, and said, "Grant? Grant? Who is Grant?" Paralyzed for a moment, the inquisitor exclaimed, "You don't mean to say ye never heard of Gen. U. S. Grant?"

"Never heard of him," solemnly answered Artemus. This confession dazed his seat mate for a few minutes; but he returned to the charge with the insinuating suggestion, "They say old Greeley is agin' him." Again the serious eyes were lifted from the book. "Greeley," he asked—"old Greeley? I never heard of him either. It appears to me, sir, that you know more strangers than any man I ever met!" This was indeed a "sockdolager." It took the interlocutor fully ten minutes to recover from his surprise. Meanwhile Artemus was deep in his book. Finally the talkative one could endure it no longer, and he broke out with, "Say! you darned fool, did you ever hear of Adam?"

"Adam? Adam?" replied Artemus, meditatively; "wh-wh-at was his first name?" This closed the conversation.

"I couldn't seem to get a good enough climax," said Mark, who confessed to inventing the story, "until I thought of my old friend Adam."—[W. H. Merrill, in Harper's Weekly.

In presenting the opportunity to buy stock in the Golden State Motor Car Co., the company is following a plan of action that seems wise, in as much as a larger list of stock holders will give a more diversified interest in the prosperity of the concern. The product thereby will have many interested and enthusiastic supporters and greatly augment the advertising of the car when it is placed before the trade. The future is certainly bright for this splendid enterprise. Wherever the car has been demonstrated it has proven its unqualified superiority in power, simplicity, reliability and economy of operation, and if the original incorporators had wished, they could have sold the patents covering the innovations in motor making to prominent automobile makers for five times the amount of the present stock subscription. The great adaptability of our motor places us in a position to take advantage of the trend towards motor carriages for every purpose—trucks, deliveries and the soon-to-be popular railway motor car.

Our motor has the power and our proposition will make the profit.

The greatest wealth-producing enterprises today are facturing plants of moderate size. Mines of gold only produced about one hundred and fifty millions while manufacturing products amounted to over billion dollars.

There are more than five hundred thousand ments with an army of over six million employes and nual product of over seventeen billion dollars is too the average man to grasp.

The selection of an investment is of utmost and in this land of opportunity wise selection is securing of a profitable investment lies in seeing quickly the real conditions. The best investment admit of too long deliberation—the better the more quickly it must be grasped. But in it are lodged all Germany's foreign political secrets and in it are hatched all the schemes for "weltpolitik" with which the restless German Emperor is prone over and anon to startle the chancelleries of Europe. There have been many projects to build a new foreign office commensurate with Germany's new place in the world, but the government is sentimental on the subject and hates to think of demolishing the old house in which Bismarck worked. So the "Wilhelmstrasse" is destined to retain its old-time, shabby appearance.

THEY PRAISED THE ORIENTALS.

HIGH COMMISSIONERS OF CHINA GOT BIG BANQUET.

Prominent New Yorkers Tendered Them a Royal Reception—John W. Foster Expressed Great Admiration for Chinese Gentlemen, and Throws Many Bouquets at Them.

The dinner party given to the Chinese High Commissioners to his Majesty, the Emperor, at the Waldorf-Astoria, says the New York Tribune, was under the auspices of the missionary boards which have headquarters in New York.

Because of the large attendance, the dinner was held in the grand ballroom. John W. Foster, former Secretary of State under President Harrison, was presiding officer, and at the guest table were: Sir Chentung Liang-Cheng, Chinese Minister; Prof. J. W. Jenks, James B. Reynolds, M. Linn Bruce, K. F. Shah, the Rev. Arthur J. Brown, Morris K. Jesup, Nicholas Murray Butler, Bishop Greer, the Rev. M. H. Hutton, Kuan Kien Woo, Ping Chung Wun, Hanlin Kwan, Hanlin Ting, Seth Low, the Rev. John G. Fagg, Robert C. Ogden, Rear-Admiral Coghlan, Cornelius N. Bliss, Brig.-Gen. Frederick Dent Grant, Woo Kuan Kien, first secretary; Alfred Tze, English secretary; Ping Chung Wun, English secretary; Kwan Hamlin, Ting Hanlin, General Yoa, Mr. Su and Mr. Wong.

The speakers were the Rev. Dr. Amory H. Bradford, M. Linn Bruce, the Rev. Dr. Arthur Judson Brown, secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church; Tuan-Fong, Tai Hung-chi, Morris K. Jesup, Bishop Greer, Nicholas Murray Butler, the Rev. Dr. Mancius H. Hutton, president of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed Church in America; the Rev. Dr. Frank D. Gamewell, professor in the Peking University, China, and Sir Chentung Liang-Cheng, Minister of China to the United States.

Covers were laid for 800, one of the largest gatherings at the Waldorf-Astoria in years, and beaten only by the memorable dinner of the Republican Club to President Roosevelt, last year.

Robert C. Ogden called the diners to order, and after reading letters of regreat from President Roosevelt and Secretary Root, introduced John W. Foster as the first speaker. Mr. Foster said:

"When I meet a Chinese gentleman I have the impulse to stand uncovered in his presence and to make a profound bow, out of respect to his great empire and race, antedating in their existence and civilization all others of which we have any record, with achievements unsurpassed in literature, in philosophy, in art and in useful inventions.

"It is this feeling which has prompted this great gathering in the metropolis of our country to welcome the distinguished members of the imperial Chinese Commission, who have paid our nation the high compliment of coming to study our institutions with a view to introducing reforms in their ancient system. The message we bring them tonight is that the institution which has done most to make our country great and happy is that which many centuries ago was brought to our forefathers by missionaries from Rome. That institution—Christianity—has permeated our entire political and social fabric, and is the foundation of our social fabric.

WAKE UP, WEAK MAN!

Come Drink of the Spring of Youth, the Source of Happiness! It is Electricity as Given by Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt!

What is the use dragging yourself around among men feeling that you are not like them, that you are not the man you ought to be, when you might as well hold up your head and feel like a two-year-old?

Don't you want to feel the vim of life in your nerves as you used to; to see the sparkle in the eyes; to have the spring in your step and the lightness in your heart that go with vigorous manhood? Life is too short to miss any of the pleasures that belong to it; so why don't you enjoy them as long as Nature intended?

I can take any man who has a spark of vitality left in his veins and fan it into a flame and make him feel like a Hercules!

I can help a rheumatic to drop his cane and crutch and hop round like a boy. I had a ptient come into my office recently and jump over a chair to show me that he was young again.

How do I do it? By filling the blood, the nerves, the organs and muscles with electric energy—that is what Nature gave them at first; that is what they have lost when you break down.

That is how I cure, and that is why I am so sure that I can cure. You have the body that needs the power, and I have the power and know how to use it.

If you have been paying money to doctors and taking nasty drugs for years, and after getting no benefit from it all you find a new lease of life after using my Belt for a month, you will be enthusiastic. You will want to go out on the highways and shout, and you won't care who knows that you were once a weakling, because now you are cured and a man again.

Why say more? Isn't this enough? Aren't you convinced that I can cure you? If you want more proof, tell me where you are and I can give you the names of people near you. You can see them and ask them what I have done for them. The word of an honest man cured is worth more than all argument, and I have thousands of them.

Now, don't delay. Enjoy all the happiness you may in this world. You can have none without health and strength.

HERE IS PROOF OF MY ARGUMENTS:

I feel 90 per cent better since wearing your belt. The losses have ceased and I am no longer troubled with headaches.
Santa Barbara, Cal. N. W. STRAW.

Your belt cured me and I feel like a new man.
Newcastle, Cal. CHARLES EGAN.

I am perfectly satisfied with the results of your treatment, for it cured me of a bad case of rheumatism.
Long Beach, Cal. W. S. BEERS.

I have worn your belt the prescribed length of time and will say that the treatment is all you claim for it in every respect, for I have no more pain, no more nervousness and the system is much stronger. Yours respectfully, Bakersfield, Cal. E. J. WAREHAM.

Your belt is all right. I have been seeking a cure for a bad case of rheumatism for years and have at last found it in the McLaughlin Belt. Yours truly, C. CAMPBELL.

Others May Treat, but We Cure
Blood Poison

On account of its frightful hideousness, specific or contagious poison in the blood is the worst of all diseases. It may be either hereditary or contracted. Once the system is tainted with it, the disease may manifest itself in the form of scrofula, eczema, rheumatic pains, stiff or swollen joints, eruptions or copper-colored spots on face or body—little ulcers in the mouth or on the tongue, sore throat, swollen tonsils, falling out of the hair or eyebrows, and finally a leprouslike decay of the flesh and bone. Our specific treatment for this trouble, varied and modified to suit each individual case, is an unfailing cure to which a vast army of restored men today owe their sturdy health.

You must come to us sooner or later; why not now? Refuse to suffer any longer on promises of others.

We cover the entire field of private and chronic, deep-seated, complicated, difficult diseases

We want every man who is suffering from any special disease or condition to come and have a talk with us. No man whose weakened system is crying out for help through contracted disease, or who has been guilty of early indiscretions or later excesses, is safe in life until such time as his errors have been corrected.

Not a Dollar Need be Paid Until Cured

You do not pay us until satisfied and you are restored to health. Can we say more? You may consult us free of charge and get our opinion without any cost to you. Call and let us explain our methods of treatment. We cure Varicocele, Hydrocele, Rupture, Stricture, Prostatic Ailments and All Diseases of Men. Many a man's life has been ruined through neglect or mistreatment of his disease. While many regular physicians have neither the knowledge nor experience necessary in treating men, many specialists are also incapable from lack of proper training and resources.

It is not our purpose to cast discredit on any physician, but it is the duty of every legitimate physician to guard the public against the fatal error of intrusting their life and health to irresponsible hands.

We have the most perfectly equipped offices and laboratories that skill and long experience could devise. Our methods are reliable, quick and certain and are changed from time to time to embody every modern improvement. To all afflicted men we say

KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

We never publish a cheap price in our "ads" for the simple reason that no honest physician can do such a thing and live up to the same. Cheap prices mean neglect, extra charges for medicine, want of interest in your case and a charge of 3 or 4 fees for 3 or 4 symptoms of the same disease.

We propose to be square with our patients by cheerfully making a thorough examination free of charge. We then give our patrons our price for a cure and let the patient use his own judgment.

OUR SUCCESS UNQUESTIONED

By our advanced and improved methods we are making cures in cases that have been unfortunate in consulting incompetent men. Our examinations of cases presented to us are so thorough and searching that errors of diagnosis are not made. Thus all our treatments are given understandingly, based on the latest researches of medical science. CONSULTATION IS ALWAYS FREE.

VARICOCELE

WE GUARANTEE AN ABSOLUTE AND PERMANENT CURE in every case we treat of varicocele. We will show to any man wishing to be cured a dozen leading business men of Los Angeles that we have cured. This fact, with our GUARANTEE of a cure, ought to convince men that they can be cured of varicocele.

STRICTURE

This trouble we treat successfully by our improved method. Electricity or electric belts cannot do this trouble any good. When you employ either you throw your money away. Call and let us explain the nature of the trouble and how you can be permanently cured.

PILES, FISTULA, RUPTURE

DR. HARRISON can and will positively cure every curable case in these troubles placed under his treatment. If you are suffering from either it costs you nothing to call and talk with him; his methods of treatment fully explained; hundreds have been cured by him after they have suffered for years.

We give you Scientific Treatment, Thorough Treatment, Clean Treatment, Based on the latest Modern Methods at Reasonable and Satisfactory Fees.

KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLE

There are few men of 25 years of age and over that have not some trouble with kidneys or bladder. More have some form of bladder trouble, usually taking the form of catarrh, inflammation of the mucous lining of the bladder, or of the neck of the bladder, involving the prostate gland. With men of middle age and older, it often becomes a very serious trouble, even to a fatal termination. Such a condition should not be allowed to remain. A skillful physician should be at once consulted and the advice taken. Without doubt the best and safest man to consult is an educated specialist. Ability and skill and common sense should go hand in hand in treating this class of troubles. If the disease has not taken too firm hold, creating serious complications, nearly every man can get relief. DR. HARRISON & CO. have been very successful in this class of troubles. As proof of their ability to cure these troubles they will gladly refer to some of the leading citizens of Los Angeles whom they have cured of apparently incurable cases. They will be glad to receive any one wishing information regarding these troubles, and will cheerfully explain the cause, nature and results of such troubles.

CONTRACTED DISEASES

By this we mean specific blood poison, urethral inflammation, stricture, local ulcers and swelling. We have warned men against neglect of treatment or unreliable methods of treating this most serious disorder. Patent medicines and treatment by drug clerks are decidedly dangerous experiments and should under no circumstances be resorted to. The cheapest and best cure is to come directly to us, and we have the ability and experience necessary to do for each case exactly the right thing at the right time. You thus avoid dangerous complications which might through poor treatment become a lasting annoyance and oftentimes assuming a dangerous character. Every patient under our care is thoroughly cured before he is discharged. All who come to us receive courteous treatment. Consultation and examination free.

DR. ALDRICH VICTORIOUS

Her License to Practice Medicine Restored By Decision of the Supreme Court.

Resumes The Curing of Cancer.

The supreme court of the State of California has handed down a decision in favor of the petitioner in the case of Dr. Aldrich (since marriage Mrs. Hewitt), versus the board of medical examiners of the state of California. The judgment is that "in the matter at bar, the state board of medical examiners had no jurisdiction to revoke the certificate of petitioner under this provision of the act, that its order in that regard was void, and it is hereby annulled and set aside." The opinion is written by Mr. Justice Lorigan; Justices Henshaw, McFarland, Angelotti and Shaw concur fully, and Justice Beatty concurs in the judgment.

This decision restores to Jessie C. Aldrich her title of "M.D.", with right and license to practice medicine as before the State board's revocation of license in August. 1905. Dr. Aldrich may be found hereafter at her offices in The Chester, 454 South Spring Street, the place of application of Mrs. S. J. Bridges' Cancer Cure.

The above finding of the court is a complete victory for Dr. Aldrich, who has been associated with Mrs. Bridge for the administration of the latter's famous Cancer Cure for over a year. This cure has been successfully applied in so many cases that its fame has widely spread.

Dr. Aldrich was possessed both of diploma of physician, and the license to practice medicine in this State. The State Board got after her and she was brought up before that tribunal on the ground that she had violated the ethics of the medical profession by advertising Mrs Bridge's Cancer Cure in the newspapers.

At her hearing, Dr. Aldrich established proof of the verity of her claims for the powers of the remedy, by the depositions of many of the healed patients. The board, however, took away her license just the same.

Whether the remedy was good or bad, spurious or genuine, was not so much the issue before them as the fact that SHE HAD ADVERTISED her business, and might be taking cases away from "ethical doctors."

The appeal was taken from the tribunal of medicine to a court of law, which recognizes Mrs. Aldrich's rights, as well as the rights of her patients in the matter, and restores her license to practice medicine.

Incidentally, it is established that a doctor has the right to advertise his or her specialty in the press.

Mrs. S. J. Bridge's Cure for Cancer is applied at the office of J. C. Aldrich, M.D., in The Chester, 454 South Spring street, where Mrs. Bridge may be found daily from 10 to 4. All who have cancers or who fear they have, are invited to call and learn of the marvelous cures which are being effected.

TO WELCOME M. FALLIERES.

Incumbent to Receive French President-elect.

Only Time in Third Republic This Was Possible.

Executives Assassinated, Removed or Resigned.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, Feb. 17.—The assumption of the office of Chief Executive of the French Republic soon, on this occasion is marked from previous inaugurations by the fact that, until M. Fallieres's arrival at the Elysee, no president of the Third Republic ever has found his predecessor there to formally transmit the powers conferred on him by the constitution. Either because of assassination, sudden death, or resignation of office, an interregnum, during which the cabinet has exercised executive powers, has preceded the beginning of each new presidential term, and for one or another of these reasons the function of installation has been denuded of ceremony.

When the first president, Thiers, resigned in May, 1873, the country was passing through a very critical period of its history, and his successor, MacMahon, consented to accept office merely as provisional president and it was only in November of that year that he agreed to continue for the full septennate, destined to be cut short by his resignation. Grevy's succession passed off quietly and unostentatiously and at his reëlection there was no necessity for a transmission of powers. Carnot filled the place left vacant by Grevy's practically enforced retirement owing to the decoration scandal. He entered the Elysee direct from Versailles.

NO CHANCE TO REJOICE.

The anarchist Caserio's dastardly deed left the country in mourning, so that there was no room in the midst of the national sorrow for rejoicing at the coming of Casimir-Perier, who soon decided to give up the position, for what reason was never clearly explained. Faure followed, once more finding the Elysee vacant on his arrival. His tragic, sudden death, found the nation again in distress when Loubet took over the presidency.

The opportunity afforded by the completion of his entire term by a popular president and the direct transmission of his powers by him to the successor was seized upon by the government as an occasion for breaking away from the dull routine usually observed. The cabinet decided that the event should be made more significant and be used to impress the people with the easy working of the republican machine even when its chief part had to be changed.

M. Fallieres will have plenty of opportunities for the display of tact in his new surroundings, for his removal from the somewhat humble official residence of the president of the Senate at the Palace of the Luxembourg to the Palace of the Elysee, the Parisian home of the chief of the state, places him at once in an entirely different environment.

CHOICE OF PALACES.

The Palace of the Elysee cannot but influence the ideas of its occupant, with its remarkable record of royal and imperial predecessors and its really regal embellishment and furnishing. Besides the Elysee, however, the new President has the choice of three splendid national palaces wherein to make his country home. These are Rambouillet, favored by Loubet; Fontainebleau, the choice of Faure; and Compiegne, occupied by the Russian Emperor and Empress during their historic visit to France, the result of which was the final arrangement of the Franco-Russian alliance. M. Fallieres may possibly depart from the usual custom and continue to reside in his little country house at Loupillon, in the department of the Lot-et-Garonne, surrounded by his beloved vines.

Much curiosity is excited as to whether M. Fallieres will be able as President to continue to lead the same simple manner of life as that to which he hitherto has been accustomed. He has declared his intention of doing so as far as state duties will permit, and during the month's interval that has elapsed between his election and his installation at the Elysee nothing has been changed.

Every morning without exception, no matter what the weather, he has quitted the Luxembourg after a slight breakfast at about 8 o'clock, and started off on a walk of six or seven miles through the streets of the city. This has been his daily practice for years, and for a man of sixty-five he proceeds at a remarkably brisk pace.

ENJOYS WALKING.

The detectives charged with his personal security since January 16 have sometimes been put to the test to keep up with him, walking as they do at a respectful distance in the rear. Each day he makes a slight change in his route, but generally arranges so that he shall pass along the grand boulevards. It is somewhat remarkable that he is rarely recognized.

Returning to his residence, M. Fallieres devotes himself to his voluminous correspondence, already prepared for him by his two secretaries. Luncheon at midday is a very simple but plenteous meal. An hour's perusal of the newspapers follows, succeeded by receptions and visits lasting till dinner, at which a few intimate political and literary friends are always present, for M. Fallieres likes society, and his guests are regaled with wines from his own vineyards. He does not follow his repasts by a cigar, for he has renounced smoking. The latter part of the evening is spent in attending to private correspondence until the hour for retirement, which is the comparatively early one of 11.

M. Fallieres has no particular hobby, but exhibits the greatest interest in anything brought to his notice. He is not deeply interested in any kind of sport, except perhaps game shooting, at which he is reputed even a greater expert than his predecessor.

Mme. Fallieres has earned a reputation for being the personification of amiability and tact, and promises to make an ideal hostess in her new home. She has a charming daughter, and a son who has already made his mark as a barrister.

OLEO TAX DODGERS CAUGHT.

DETROIT, Feb. 17.—Thomas Lorimer of this city was arraigned today before United States Commissioner Davidson upon the charge of manufacturing colored oleomargarine without paying the government tax. Government officers say that his arrest marks the exposing of one of the biggest revenue frauds unearthed in this part of the country for years. Warrants are out for several other men alleged to be implicated in the frauds. The revenue officers declare that one concern with which Lorimer was connected has been buying on an average of 35,000 pounds of oleomargarine a month, coloring it and reselling the stuff as creamery butter.

WILL INCREASE EXPORTS.

United States Control of Panama Railroad Ends Monopoly in Transportation.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Feb. 17.—The occupation of Panama by the United States government and especially its control of the Panama Railroad, has had a marked effect upon the Pacific Coast countries of South and Central America, according to Paul Gonzenbach, United States Consular Agent at Manta Ecuador, who was here yesterday.

According to Mr. Gonzenbach the control by the United States of the Panama Railroad and the consequent abolition of the monopoly of that company over the route across the isthmus will increase greatly the exports of Central and South American countries to the United States. This will result in cheapening many necessary articles of commerce in the United States which hitherto have been exported to Hamburg, Germany, and thence across the Atlantic to the United States.

FRENCH BOAT IS FIRED UPON.

TURKEY, OF MOROCCO, SENDS SHOT AT ZENITH.

Steamer Was Headed Toward the Gunboat Flying the White Flag When Order Was Given—Probable, However, That No Complications Will Follow.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ORAN (Algeria) Feb. 17.—The Echo de Oran says that the French steamer Zenith left Oran Wednesday evening, going to Marchica. On her arrival at that port she debarked five persons, who visited Delbief, the chief of the pretender's staff.

Toward noon, perceiving the Moroccan gunboat Turkey, which had been anchored in the bay of Melilla, leaving port, and coming in his direction, the captain of the Zenith went on board his own steamer, hoisted the white flag and steamed toward the Turkey, with the object of entering into conversation with her commander. The Turkey thereupon fired a loaded shell without hitting the Zenith, which put on full steam for the Zafarine Islands, the Turkey pursuing. The pretender's shore batteries bombarded the Turkey, but without touching her, as she was out of range.

The Zenith, having a good lead and being about to reach the Zafarines, was brought up by a blank shot from the French cruiser La Lande and immediately stopped. Soon afterward the Zenith, the La Lande and the Turkey arrived at the Zafarines, when explanations were furnished by the Zenith, which was ordered by the commander of the La Lande to return to Oran, where she arrived last night. The passengers on the Zenith who were left at Marchica, will be brought to Oran by the La Lande.

LA LANDE AT FAULT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, Feb. 17.—The Echo de Paris this morning prints an interview with its correspondent at Oran, secured from M. Oser, the owner of the steamer Zenith, who was aboard that vessel at the time she was fired on by the Moroccan gunboat Turkey. M. Oser's version of the affair is the same as that published by the Echo de Oran.

Before leaving the Zafarines for Oran the Zenith was subjected to a thorough search by the commander of the French cruiser La Lande without finding the slightest trace of contraband. M. Oser holds that the Turkey was guilty of a breach of the law in firing on the vessel. The Zenith was engaged in a purely pleasure trip and carried no cargo. Her owner blames the commander of the La Lande in not intervening to enforce the respect due the French flag.

The Echo de Paris says it is obvious from this that the La Lande's conduct was not correct and that fears of international complications are baseless.

VENEZUELA READY FOR WAR.

Accumulates Stores of Ammunition and Forbids Foreign Officials to Board Steamers.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CARACAS (Venezuela) Feb. 15.—Via Willemstad, Island of Curacao, Feb. 17.—The preparations for war at the Venezuelan ports have been completed. A large quantity of ammunition arrived in Venezuela last week.

All the foreign Consuls, Consular Agents and other foreign officials have been absolutely forbidden to go on board steamers at ports without first obtaining official permission. American Minister Russell, who has been suffering from an indisposition, has gone to Macuto to recuperate.

The Venezuelan government has appointed Guzman Garbiras to be Minister to the United States in place of M. Veloz Giotico, who offended President Castro by voting to hold the Pan-American Congress at Rio De Janeiro.

LUMBER COMPANY FAILS.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 17.—A receiver was appointed here this afternoon, for the F. E. Creelman Lumber Manufacturing Company by the Federal Court. The failure is said to be in connection with the bankruptcy proceedings of the John E. Smith Lumber Company of Nashville, Tenn., and the closing of the Bank of America in Chicago. Garland Wolfe was appointed receiver, his bond being fixed at $75,000. In the petition it is claimed that the F. H. Creelman Lumber Manufacturing Company owes debts to the amount of approximately $1,000,000. It is alleged that the assets of the company will not exceed $600,000.

BIG COPPER TRANSFER MADE.

BUTTE (Mont.) Feb. 17.—L. O. Evans, counsel for the Amalgamated Copper Company, returned last night from New York with the papers for all the properties included in the sale of the Heinze interests to the company of which Thomas V. Cole is the president. The deeds, seven in number, bear date of January 30, 1906, and were filed for record in the office of the clerk of Silver Bow county today, thus completing the formal transfers.

THE BEAUTIFUL REDONDO VILLA TRACT THE BEAUTIFUL

Only $90 Per Lot

$4 Down, $4 Per Month. No Interest, No Taxes

Large level lots, 50x150 feet. Rich soil, pure water, fine climate. All lots, including corners, one price—$90 per lot—no more, no less. You know what you have to pay—$90 per lot—no higher. Our tract is immediately adjoining the city limits of Redondo. where over $2,000,000 have already been expended in grand and substantial improvements. The beautiful Redondo Villa Tract is on the Camino Real (King's Highway) boulevard, connecting Redondo with Los Angeles. We have just bought this beautiful tract for $145,000, and believing in the principle that it pays to let our customers make a profit, hence we have decided on this grand profit-sharing plan. We will make a profit, and all our purchasers are guaranteed a profit of 25 per cent. within one year, as per our written agreement.

Mr. H. E. Huntington is Expending Over a Million Dollars Around Redondo In Substantial Improvements.

Go down to Redondo and see for yourself. At Jefferson street and Grand avenue see the immense stacks of heavy steel rails for the double-tracking of the present two electric lines of the Los Angeles and Redondo Railway Company. The rails are arriving daily. Dirt will soon fly. Better buy now. Then there's the Los Angeles-Pacific Railway Company's electric line to Redondo, the broad-gauging of which will soon occur. And in addition to the above three electric lines now running to Redondo, is the great Santa Fe steam railroad. With four lines of transportation it would seem as if same would be sufficient, but surveyors are in the field laying out the shortest line of all to connect Los Angeles with its choicest seashore suburb—Redondo. Mr. Huntington has let the contract for the building at Redondo of the largest electric power house on the Pacific Coast, to cost $800,000. A suburban local electric railroad is now nearing completion at Redondo. The grand three-story business block of Mr. W. M. Garland at Redondo will be finished in about two weeks. Follow successful men like Mr. Huntington and Mr. Garland—they know that Redondo is substantial and a safe place to invest in. Buy anywhere around Redondo and you are sure to make large profits. Three commercial wharves. A safe harbor by twenty years' practical test. Redondo is permanent and has just begun to grow. Then, again, referring to successful men, we notice that the following have bought to the north of Redondo: Mr. Edwin Chambers, the far-sighted general freight agent of the Santa Fe; Mr. George H. Peck, the successful banker of San Pedro; Mr. John J. Byrne, the capable general passenger agent of the Santa Fe, and Dan Murphy, the millionaire oil operator of Los Angeles.

A WORD TO THE WISE IS SUFFICIENT. BUY!

Remember that your purchase is made with the distinct understanding that we will refund all money paid us, with 6 per cent. per annum interest added, if, after visiting the Redondo Villa Tract, it is found that we have misrepresented our proposition in the slightest particular.

25 per Cent Guaranteed Increase

For $4 down and $4 per month until paid for, we will sell you a "Redondo Villa Tract" lot for $90, subject to the following guarantee from us: If at the expiration of one year from purchase this $90 lot is not worth $112.50—or 25 per cent. increase—based on the price at which our corps of salesmen will then be selling similar lots, we will refund all of the money you have paid us, with 6 per cent. interest additional. If you should die at any time before payments have been completed we will give to your heirs a deed of the lot without further cost. If you should lose employment or be sick you will not forfeit the land, but as each written certificate of sickness or non-employment is received monthly your time for payment will be extended another month.

Our Restrictions.

No saloons, no shanties, no factories. Purchasers are not compelled to build, but if they do, then they must erect attractive-looking houses, there being no "dollar limit." We leave it to each purchaser to build a pretty looking house, which must be neatly painted, as we know that for a moderate sum one can now build a very pretty bungalow. Lumber is cheaper at Redondo than at Los Angeles, as there are three commercial wharves at Redondo at which lumber schooners are daily discharging their cargoes

If Russell Sage, the Multi-Millionaire of New York, Told You

That you could make a fortune in suburban real estate (especially when it costs you only $4 down and $4 per month,) wouldn't you be impressed? Well, listen! That's just what Mr. Sage did say in the New York World of September 28, 1902: "Young man, buy real estate, especially acre property in the outlying boroughs, and then work hard at your usual avocation. Your real estate purchase will make your old age comfortable."—Russell Sage.

LOGGERS' LIFE ONE GAMBLE.

Records of Hardy Lumbermen in Maine Woods.

Wild Races With Death of Common Occurrence.

Task of Guiding Great Loads Over Icy Roads.

BANGOR (Me.) Feb. 5.—Up in the north woods of Maine, where thousands of men have been at work for three months past cutting down the giant pines which will make up the season's cut of logs to come down the streams to the mills next spring, the crews are now finishing up the cutting operations and the hauling to the yards, and are preparing to have the logs piled in the yards hauled to the landings where they are handy to the streams in which they will be plunged when they start on their rough passage downstream to the mills. The hardest part of the winter's work is not the cutting and yarding, but rather there is the task of getting the millions of feet of logs from the yards to the landings over long woods roads, where the teamster has to be constantly on his watch for the safety of his team and the load of logs he is driving.

There are woods roads in the Maine lumbering region where it is no more difficult to pilot a team of horses and a load of logs than it would be to do the same thing on a State highway, but the lumberman knows too well that such roads as this are all too few. The character of the road depends on the character of the country through which it runs, and the Maine lumbering region has its full share of the wrinkles and folds and creases on the face of Mother Earth. Yarding the logs is usually a simple matter, for the distance to the yard is seldom more than half a mile, and the road is "swamped" to the place where the teams will be most likely to have the easiest haul around the uneven character of the ground.

[illegible] LEVELS A DELIGHT.

Hauling to the landings, however, is a difficult matter. The landings are usually not less than a mile from the yards, and often the logs have to be hauled half a dozen miles before they reach the landing places. The logs have to be hauled over roads that run over logs, up hill and down dale, over steep declivities where the load of logs is above the heads of the horses, and where the breaking of a rope or chain or a slip of one of the horses might mean death to team and teamster. It is on these deep inclines that the snubline comes into use, and where some of the worst accidents ever recorded in the Maine woods have taken place. The roads over which the logs have to be hauled are kept in as icy a condition as possible at all times. The snow itself is not slippery enough to suit the lumbermen. Even though the snowfall be heavy and the snow lies several feet deep on the roads, and the surface be smooth as a floor, they are not satisfied, but must have the surface of the road a glare of ice. Sometimes nature will bring this condition about by a rainstorm which clears with a cold northwest wind which freezes the surface of the roads instantly into a glaze of ice. If the rain does not come the lumberman resorts to other means to make easier hauling for his teams, and many of the concerns have sprinklers such as are used on the city streets and sprinkle the road at night until the surface is glare ice. With the roads in this condition a pair of horses will step along at a lively pace with a dozen huge logs chained on the sled where the road is fairly level or the grade favorable.

DANGER ON STEEPS.

On the pitches, however, no ice is wanted. Everything is done there to retard the progress of the heavy loads as much as possible. The snow is shoveled off these pitches, and earth, boughs, manure and other stuff are thrown on top of the snow, so that the heavily loaded sleds will not slip and run onto the horses or put too severe a strain on the snubline. The curves in the road, if there be any, are banked up as much as possible to prevent the sled from slewing in going around the curves and upsetting the load of logs or breaking the chains which hold the logs on the sled.

Here is where the snubline comes into play. The snubline is a hawser three inches thick, and of a length to coincide with the length of the pitch on which it is used. The most common way of using the snubline is to have a line about twice the length of the pitch. At the top of a steep incline a big tree has been felled, leaving a stump four feet high. The largest tree is always picked for the purpose, and the bark is then stripped from the stump from within a foot or so of the top, leaving the stumps as smooth as an ax handle.

When the teamster comes to the top of the grade he stops his team and jumps down. He takes the end of the great hawser and passes the line completely around the load of logs, making two half hitches, so that when a strain is placed on the line the hitches slip and the noose draws tightly about the load. Then he takes the line and passes it around the stump three or four times, shoving the coil down as near the bottom of the stump as possible, clucks to his horses and takes up the slack, then jumps on the load of logs and starts down hill. The friction of the folds of the big line on the stump is sufficient to hold the load back off the horses, while the weight of the line passing up the hill to the stump is enough to prevent it paying off the stump too fast. The driver stands upright on his load and watches the straining hawser with the eye of a hawk. After a snubline has been used some time it becomes worn as smooth as glass by the friction of the stump. Sometimes it catches a sharp piece of wood, and a few strands are cut. These broken strands untwist like a coiled spring, and when the strain is thrown on the line the break grows larger with amazing rapidity. When one of the big strands breaks the teamster knows it by the convulsive flip of the line, and he is on the alert at once. If the line breaks he yells to his horses, and sends his whip stinging about their heads. The intelligent brutes instinctively feel their danger when the line snaps, and, throwing themselves forward into their collars, they start on a race with death down the hillside. The driver sticks to his post as long as he can, and does his best to guide his steeds. He is comparatively safe, for he can jump at any time without much danger of injury in the deep snow.

THRILLING MOMENTS.

Not so with the horses, however. The great load of logs goes swaying after them almost as fast as they can run, even though they are not harnessed to the sled. All the frightened animals can do is to keep their feet, and do their best to keep the load from running onto their heels, or leaving the road, to crash into the trees and take them with it. If one of the horses falls or anything about the sled breaks, it is all up with the poor brutes. Sometimes the swaying of the load will break a chain which holds the logs on the sled and let the great sticks go shooting out over the heads of the horses, perhaps catching the teamster unawares, also, and crushing him.

The breaking of a subline does not always have a tragic result. It is the miraculous escapes of the men and horses that the men like to tell about afterward. It often happens that the teamster guides his flying steeds and their swaying load down over the steep hill and brings them to a stop after a mad rush of a quarter of a mile, covered with lather and with their sides heaving and nostrils distended, but victors in the race with death.

In the above method of using the snubline one end of the line passes back up the hill while the end attached to the load is going down. By this method one end of the line is always at the top of the hill, and the teams are saved the trouble of carrying the line back up the hill. This method is practicable on most hills, but there are places in the woods where the grade is so long and steep that another method has to be adopted. This other method, while seeming safer, is as a matter of fact, fraught with more danger to men and horses than the first. The big line is made fast about the load as it was in the first instance, and two or three turns are taken around the stump. The rest of the line is coiled up a few yards away. The teamster starts his horses down the hill, and two men take the slack end of the line and pay it out gradually as the load descends, always keeping the line taut and running around the stump as smoothly as possible. These men wear mittens with thick leather palms so they can grip the line without having their hands torn and blistered by the line passing through them. If the line gets the better of them they have a way of checking it by taking a cantdog and using it as a lever to throw the line harder against the stump, increasing the friction and checking the load.

RACES WITH DEATH.

Sometimes the snubline gets the better of the men handling it, and instead of paying out smoothly goes by jerks, getting from four inches to a foot of slack at every jerk. When this happens there is trouble in store for somebody unless the men can stop the line with their lever. Every slip of the line sends a thrill through the whole length and sets it to flopping and swaying and vibrating just as the violin string vibrates when the bow is drawn across it. This makes a great strain on the line, and if there is the slightest imperfection in it it is likely to snap, or in its gyrations it may get the better of the men and run through their hands so fast that the leather palms of their mittens smoke and they have to drop it to save themselves. They send a shout of warning down to the teamsters and another race ensues, with life and death tossing a coin to see which wins.

There are times when it is not necessary to use a snubline at all; yet the sled has to be kept from running onto the horses. This is done by using a log chain on the runners of the sled. The heavy log chain is wound around the sled runners so that as soon as the load starts the chain is drawn under the iron shoes of the runners, cutting into the road so that it impedes the progress of the sled. Many teamsters consider the log chain the best thing to be used under most circumstances, but the use of the chain makes havoc with the roads by the way they cut in and make great ruts. Then, again, there is the possibility of there being a flaw in the chain, and it breaks when it strikes a rock and jeopardizes the lives of men and horses.

There are many places in the Maine woods where the logs cannot be hauled at all, but have to be rolled down an incline. In some places great chutes are constructed of logs, and the logs are sluiced down to the landing place below. A notable example of this is to be found not many miles from Bangor. Up on Squaw Mountain, about six miles from Greenville, the Shaw Lumber Company has maintained a log sluice nearly a mile in length and sluiced thousands of feet of logs down the mountain and into Moosehead Lake. Upon Mount Kathadin this winter John Ross & Son are rolling logs down the side of the mountain and yarding them on the lowland. It is a thrilling sight to see these great sticks go tumbling and rolling for hundreds of feet down the mountain side and stop in the yard below. Lumbering is an interesting operation anyway, but there is probably more of the picturesqueness to be found in these phases of it than in any other, unless it be the thrilling and dangerous work of driving and jam-breaking which will have to be done in the spring.

PUPILS SWAMP POLYTECHNIC.

WINTER TERM OPENS WITH A RUSH AT NEW SCHOOL.

End of Week Finds Fourteen Hundred Enrolled, With Prospect of Greater Jam by September—Manager McLellan of Los Angeles High Lunchroom a Busy Boy.

The opening of the winter term has meant busy days during the past week for both pupils and teachers. Over 400 new students were enrolled at the Polytechnic High School the first day of the term. On Tuesday twenty-five more came, and all through the week new entries were registered. More than 1350 pupils made up the grand total Monday, and before the week was over the number had swelled to over 1400. If the popularity of the new High School keeps up several hundred pupils will be turned away by next September.

JACK M'LELLAN, manager Los Angeles High School lunch room.

At the opening session the auditorium was filled to standing capacity by the pupils alone. Superintendent Freeman of the Butte, Mont., schools was present and gave a ten-minute talk, and two or three of the students made brief speeches on athletics and on the field meet which took place yesterday on the U.S.C. grounds.

The Self-Governing Committee did heroic service in helping to guide new pupils over the building and initiate them into the regular routine of High School work. There are thirty-five girls and an equal number of boys on this committee, and their efficient service has solved the problem of discipline in a most satisfactory manner.

ART VISITORS EAT.

The committee of the outdoor art section visited the school early in the week, looking over the roof garden and grounds and discussing plans for beautifying them. The following ladies and gentlemen made up the party; Mmes. Willoughby Rodman, Dr. Wernigk, Terrill, Mr. Morley, superintendent of parks, and Dr. W. A. Lamb. They enjoyed lunch in the dining-room at the faculty table.

Mrs. Best, dean of the woman's department of the University of Southern California, also was an interested visitor in the culinary department of the school. She came to inspect its working with a view to establishing a similar department in the university.

The exceeding popularity of this school restaurant is a marked feature of both the Los Angeles and the Polytechnic High Schools. It never was more strongly attested than during the past week, when it has been entirely impossible to keep up with the demands of lusty appetites.

"Give me two sandwiches," besought a hungry boy as he stood in line before the lunch counter.

"My dear fellow," responded the bustling matron as she hurriedly handed out one, "don't you realize that there are hundreds in the line behind you who won't get even a bite if I let you have all you call for," and so they were doled out, one to each individual, as long as they lasted, and when they gave out the unfortunate ones in the rear rushed in desperation to patronize the ice cream and tamale wagons lined up beside the pavement.

CLEVER MANAGER "JACK."

An extension was being installed on the great kitchen range at the Los Angeles High School when The Times reporter made the rounds. Jack McLellan, who is manager of this department, has been at his wits' ends throughout the week trying to solve the knotty problem of providing for his big family of 150 hungry youngsters. He is quite positive that when he chooses his vocation in life it will not be the hotel business, but if he were to be as successful in that line as he is in running the school restaurant, he would be equal to almost any emergency.

The system has been in vogue long enough now to judge something of its merits. Manager McLellan says it costs between four and five hundred dollars a month to run the lunchroom. He has been able to meet all bills regularly the first of each month with the revenue which accumulates from the very modest-priced viands, which demonstrates that the cost of food in Los Angeles is very moderate.

RUSH ON ICE CREAM.

"We change the menu every day," says Manager Jack, "but there is one staple we always have and that is ice cream," waving his hand impressively toward the ice cream delivery wagon which was just then unloading freezer after freezer of the cold stuff. This cold, damp weather affects the sale of ice cream? Not much—among my patrons. It's the one thing the boys and girls never tire of. Our lunchroom facilities ought to be doubled. Whereas, we can seat only about 150, we should have accommodations for three or four hundred."

Next year the Los Angeles High will have to select a new manager, for handsome Jack enters the State University at Berkeley in August.

"Blue and White," the High School monthly publication, is out with a larger and more elaborate number than usual, with an extremely artistic cover design drawn by Miss Callie Evanston. The registration for the winter term at the Los Angeles High totals 1500.

DROPS DEAD IN HOME.

M. Harry Merriman, Well Known on Pacific Coast, Sudden Victim of Heart Disease.

The beautiful and happy home of M. Harry Merriman, No. 2625 Kenwood avenue, was suddenly changed on Friday night to a place of mourning.

Mr. Merriman was spending his evening at home, as was his wont, and at about 9:30 o'clock he arose from his chair and started to another part of the house to get a drink of water. As he walked across the floor he fell suddenly and died almost immediately, from an attack of heart disease, and though a physician was instantly summoned the vital spark had flown before he could reach the house. Nothing could have been more unexpected, for Mr. Merriman has always enjoyed best of health.

M. HARRY MERRIMAN.

The deceased, who was 36 years of age, at the time of his death, was connected with the Conservative Life Insurance Company, and among his acquaintances was one of the most popular men in Los Angeles. For nine years he was the representative of a great tobacco corporation in this city and Arizona, and as such was widely known all over the Pacific Coast. He was an active and enthusiastic member of the Traveling Men's Protective Association and of the Maccabees.

He was a native of Virginia and came to Los Angeles with his father eighteen years ago, being the eldest of three sons. The entire family were charter members of Immanuel Presbyterian Church, and the father, M. H. Merriman, is at present the oldest official member of that congregation. The Merrimans came here from Rochester, N. Y., where the connection is widely known in banking and mercantile circles of that city.

The father and mother of the deceased had just gone to Seattle on a visit, and in response to a telegram conveying to them the sad intelligence of their son's sudden death, have announced their immediate return.

The widow is a daughter of one of America's well-known newspaper men, Hon. Thomas A. Stowe, for many years editor of the Cleveland Plaindealer, and he and Mrs. Stowe have likewise telegraphed that they are now on the way here. Funeral arrangements await their coming, as well as that of Mr. and Mrs. Merriman from Seattle. The widow is left with a daughter of 5 years, and an older daughter by a former marriage.

HAZARD COMING BACK.

Man Who Awaits Trial on Serious Charge Returning With Body of Son, a Valencia Victim.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SEATTLE, Feb. 17.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] E. L. Hazard, the Los Angeles real estate man arrested for a criminal assault upon Lulu Rowland, and who was released on bail to permit him to come North to identify certain of the bodies in the Valencia disaster, is a passenger by the steamship Umatilla out of here today. He has with him the body, of his son, Roy Hazard, who was steering the two girls, Mabel and Lulu Rowland, away from the scene of the younger girl's escapade, apparently to save his father at the time of trial, when all three were lost in the Valencia.

The Umatilla connects at San Francisco with the State of California for San Pedro, in which vessel Hazard will continue his return unless he should determine to take train back to Los Angeles.

Hazard was released on bail by Judge Smith to permit of his going to identify the body of his son, and H. L. Rowland, the father of the two girls concerned in the scandal, also went North and for the same sad purpose. Their fears proved to be warranted, for all three bodies were identified, and those of the girls have been buried at Victoria, B. C.

The absence of the prosecuting witness from the trial of Hazard, however, will not necessarily quash the trial for under the circumstances all the testimony taken at the preliminary examination will be admitted and at that time Lulu Rowland made her statement at length.

BIGGEST STORE IS THEIR PLAN.

Millions in Undertaking of Eastern Merchants.

Propose to Open "El Emporio" by Next October.

Seventh and Broadway Corner Selected as Site.

Los Angeles is to have the largest department store west of Chicago. This was made certain yesterday by the signing of a fifty-year lease and other papers providing for the erection of a six-story building for the housing of the store.

"El Emporio" will be the new merchandising center, and its location will be at the northwest corner of Seventh street and Broadway. Within two weeks bids for the construction of the building will be received, and it is the purpose of the managers to have the structure ready for the opening of the mammoth store by the first of next October.

The entire proposition is a $2,000,000 one, and it is backed by unlimited capital. The new firm plans to develop here the greatest retail business west of Chicago.

The property covered by this fifty-year lease has a frontage of 142 feet on Broadway, and 150 feet on West Seventh street. There will be six stories, besides a basement with 14-foot walls, and an elaborate roof garden. The structure will be of steel and brick.

The lease is made on a graduating schedule and it involves an outlay for the period of fully $3,000,000.

Papers for the incorporation of the company are being prepared, and will be filed during the ensuing week. "El Emporio" has in its personnel G. M. McGillin of Cleveland, O., who for twenty-nine years has conducted one of the largest retail businesses in that State; John B. Schwaegler, a manufacturer of ladies' suits, underwear, etc., of Buffalo, N. Y.; Charles E. Grosse, a men's clothing and furnishing goods merchant of Chicago, and F. L. Besselman, who for the past eleven years has been general manager at Hamburger's department store in this city.

The building to be erected for this firm will cost $300,000, and its location is valued at $700,000. The firm will place a $1,000,000 stock of goods in the store and its buyers will soon be in the field in both American and continental Europe.

The entire Broadway and Seventh-street frontages on the first floor will be taken up with windows for display. Broad entrances will be placed on each street frontage. There will be five sets of elevators and all the conveniences known to modern store building.

The roof garden, from which a fine view of the greater portion of the city may be secured, will have waiting and rest rooms for ladies, reading rooms, café and refreshment booths.

All of the men connected with the new firm have had wide mercantile experience. Mr. McGillin commenced his business career in Cleveland in [illegible] and had the first department store in that city. During his twenty-nine years of business life in Cleveland he expended more than $1,000,000 in newspaper advertising. He was the first merchant there to install elevator service, or to use page advertising.

Charles Grosse, who is one of the heaviest stockholders in "El Emporio," began his business career with Field, Leiter and Company, which was succeeded by the present firm of Marshall Field and Company, in Chicago. For eleven years he has been conducting an extensive business in Chicago.

John B. Schwaegler's manufacturing interests in Buffalo have been extensive for several years. He also has had long experience in the mercantile line.

While the actual leases were signed only yesterday, these men have been engaged for more than a week past on the details, and they have already issued cards announcing the name of the new store and the statements of their aims: "The largest department store west of Chicago; the best department store between the two oceans."

Mount Wilson Observatory.

AVALON (Santa Catalina Island) Feb. 15.—[To The Editor of The Times:] To oblige a subscriber, will you be good enough to inform me, through your columns: (1.) Whether the proposed observatory on Mount Wilson is being established as part of the Carnegie Institute. (2.) How will its telescope compare in power with those now in use, such as that of the Lick Observatory, the Harvard, etc.? (3.) When is it thought that it will be installed on the mountain and ready for work? (4.) Is the Mt. Wilson Observatory to be equipped for any special work, other than that undertaken by observatories now in existence? (5.) What special reason, if any, is there for putting it on Mt. Wilson? Your kind response will be greatly appreciated. Yours truly,

C. F. SAUNDERS.

ANSWER: (1.) The Carnegie Institution has appropriated $315,000 towards its construction and equipment. (2.) There will be two telescopes, both reflectors. The Snow telescope, already in use, is unique. It has a fixed, horizontal tube, provided with a coelastadt which reflects the rays of the sun to a concave mirror whose focus is 145 feet distant, where an image is formed sixteen inches in diameter. The Ritchey telescope, not yet completed, will be the largest in the world. The mirror, which is sixty inches in diameter, and weighs more than a ton, is now being ground by Prof. Ritchey at the astronomical machine shop in Pasadena. It will be used exclusively for stellar photographic and spectroscopic work. Both the Lick and Harvard observatories have thirty-six inch reflectors with which they have done remarkably good work. The Greenwich observatory has a thirty-eight inch reflector. (3.) The Snow telescope is already installed, and with it spectroscopic observations of the sun's photosphere are made on all cloudless days. The fierce solar cyclones of hydrogen, carbon, calcium, iron and other elements are noted and their volumes and varying forms from hour to hour are recorded. The giant reflector will doubtless require from eighteen months to two years to complete its massive and highly complicated mounting, and the housing under its great dome. (4.) The Solar Observatory on Mount Wilson will be the most complete and best equipped astrophysical observatory in existence. The most notable one abroad is that at Potsdam, near Berlin, Germany. (5.) It was located on Mount Wilson because, after testing the atmospheric conditions of many other localities in Southern California and other countries, it was found to possess advantages not existing elsewhere, particularly in its climatic conditions. One of these advantages consists in the large number of days in which there is what is technically called "good seeing." Another is the fact that it has a larger proportion of cloudless days and nights than are found elsewhere. Astronomers throughout the globe are taking great interest in the development of this observatory, and are anticipating important results from the work which will be performed by its able corps of astronomers.

State Bank Laws.

FULLERTON, Cal., Feb. 14.—[To the Editor of The Times:] We note in your last issue an article signed by George W. Burton, entitled "Your Bank Book, What's Behind It?" Under the caption "The State Banks" occurs the statement: "The banks acting under a State charter in the State of California are required by law to keep on hand, directly or indirectly, no portion whatever of their deposits."

In "Banking Laws of California," page 100, et seq., is an act approved March 24, 1903, and amended March 20, 1905, on page 111, section 24, is the following:

"Every banking corporation —— shall at all times have on hand in cash an amount equal to at least —— 15 per cent. of its demand or immediate liabilities and time certificates of deposit." Amendment approved March 20, 1905; in effect immediately. This looks very much to us as if this were a State law, and how your correspondent can say that "it is only a recommendation, and not binding, except in a moral way upon any banker," and that "legally, he may ignore the recommendations" is something we cannot understand. In fact, your correspondent seems to be a little prejudiced against State banks anyway, but we still think that he should stick a little closer to the truth.

Kindly look the matter up and see if we are not right.

Very truly yours,

ARTHUR STALEY, cashier,
Farmers' and Merchants' Bank of Fullerton.

[The writer of the article was out of the State for more than a year and relied on his knowledge of the law before it was amended.—Ed. Times.]

PERSONAL—
MRS. MASSON, the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (Suite 17,) by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READING FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in her investigations along psychological lines, that what pertains to occult phenomena proper, can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subjects, name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in every day life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.
(Daily and evenings, Sundays 9 to 3.) 18

PERSONAL—HAVE YOUR HANDS HONestly read and the many future events of your life accurately prognosticated by the celebrated, SKILLFUL, SCIENTIFIC PALMIST,

PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE, acknowledged by hundreds of the best intellects—his patrons—as the finest and most remarkable reader of hands in this country, and pronounced superior to Cheiro.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S readings, which are thorough and scientific, have nothing in common whatever with the fictitious readings of illiterate humbug palmists, psychics, fortune tellers, etc., who scarcely know one line or mount from the other. A satisfactory reading can only be had from one who has thoroughly mastered the laws of this wonderful science through years of critical study of planetary influences on the lines of the hand, combined with large experience, trained judgment, etc. All kinds of diseases accurately diagnosed. Careful advice given in domestic, love affairs, divorce, etc.; also of financial success or failure, changes, deaths, investments, vocation in life, and many other important things you should know.

PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of his profession, having positively read—FROM LIFE—more celebrated people than any other palmist in this country. He does not deceive the public in this respect. PALMISTRY AND ASTROLOGY, TOO, LIKE OTHER LEGITIMATE PROFESSIONS, ARE NOT ADVERTISED IN ANY SENSATIONAL MANNER BY GENUINE READERS. THE TRUE READER HOLDS HIS PROFESSION AS SACRED AS THAT OF YOUR FAMILY PHYSICIAN.

E. H. Sothern says: "I find your reading coincides with Cheiro's." Paul Gilmore, actor, says: "I want to express to you my keen appreciation of your reading; it is by far the most scientific I have ever had." Juliet Crosby, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Tod Sloan (famous jockey,) formerly read by Cheiro, says: "Your reading is the most complete I have ever had, and can say for your work that it is wonderful." Also read hands of Admiral Schley, Senator Clark, Gov. Pardee, Gen. Chaffee, Louis James, Baron Rothschild, Joaquin Miller, Huntington, Ysaye, Sousa, Innes, Chiaffarelli, Susan B. Anthony, Nance O'Neil, Calve, Modjeska, Julia Marlowe, Caruso, Sembrich, Gadski, Warde, Kidder, Jefferson, Edison, Nat Goodwin, Florence Roberts, and hundreds of others.

Intelligent, high-class patronage solicited—those capable of appreciating the superior qualities of a fine reading. ALL READINGS ARE STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL.

ASTROLOGY AND THE HOROSCOPE.

PROF. ALTHOUSE has also given many years of critical study to, and is an experienced practioner in, the science of MODERN ASTROLOGY—the casting of horoscopes, etc. The Horoscope is decidedly a guide in life, and shows remarkable things when properly cast. SCIENTIFIC PREDICTIONS ON ALL QUESTIONS OF LIFE, as calculated through the trained judgment of Prof. Althouse, WILL STAGGER THE SENSES.

PROF. ALTHOUSE, in his large and successful practice, has acquired a varied experience of his fellow men in life. HIS WONDERFUL PROFICIENCY in hand reading and casting of horoscopes enables him to see for the future, both the good and the evil. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances. Daily and evenings, Sunday 11 to 3. STUDIO PARLORS, 245½ S. SPRING ST. 18

Sheldon will positively make no charge for his services unless you are entirely satisfied and find him superior to any palmist or psychic who has ever visited the city; tells your full name, what you called for and when you will marry.

"OPPORTUNITY, MASTER OF HUMAN DESTINIES, AM I."

It takes two things to make success—opportunity and the man to take hold of it. Below are the opportunities. Are you the man to take hold? I know these to be sterling propositions. I have others listed in every line. Let me know what you want.

$5000—manufacturing business. This amount of cash will secure an active interest, at a good salary, in a manufacturing concern that pays monthly dividends. Capital is required to extend the business. This is a substantial business established for years and one that has increased beyond the present capital employed. I vouch for the high-class of this investment.

$10,000—CLOTHING BUSINESS. This amount secures half interest at invoice, without any bonus for good will, in first-class clothing and gent's furnishing business, right in the heart of the city. The owner will guarantee 15 per cent. net the first year. This proposition merits the consideration of any one familiar with this branch of business.

$5000—CANDY AND CATERING BUSINESS. This is located right in the heart of the city, has a good lease at a low rent, and does a business of $1500 a month.

$3000—RESTAURANT AND LUNCH ROOM. Location central; four years' lease at $150 a month. Clears $300 a month. The owner will prove this statement by offering to a prospective buyer the privilege of coming and watching the business till he is satisfied.

$2500—BAKERY AND DELICACY BUSINESS. This business has been established for a great many years, and clears at least $2500 per annum; location central.

$10,000 — SIXTY-TWO-ROOM APARTMENT-HOUSE. Furnished less than a year ago. High-grade Axminster and velvet carpets; about one-half of the furniture is mahogany, and the balance quarter-sawed oak. 2 years' lease at $325 per month. Private bath in connection with every suite. Half cash, balance on easy terms. Poor health of the owner is the only reason for selling.

$550—MEAT MARKET. This is an old-established stand, and does a business of $40 a day. If you want a snap in a meat market, see this at once.

$2300—GROCERY STORE. Located near the city. Did a business last month of $130 a day average. Will sell the fixtures and lease very reasonably and invoice the stock.

$16,000—34-ROOM APARTMENT-HOUSE. This price includes the furnishings complete, together with the real estate. Call at our office and let us give you full particulars.

$800—RESTAURANT—clears $175 a month.

$600—STATIONERY AND BOOKS, located on Broadway.

$3500—CONFECTIONERY, centrally located.

$250—CIGAR STAND—business $10 a day.

$1500—CIGAR STORE—business $30 a day.

$2000—LADIES' BARBER SHOP—clears $150 a month.

HAVE YO UA FEW HUNDRED DOLLARS that you want to invest in a legitimate mining enterprise that may bring large returns or possibly a fortune? If so, address M, box 136, TIMES OFFICE, and learn of one proposition in which there is no promoters' stock, no salaries, no graft of any kind, and where you get into a concern that will stand the strictest investigation. Best of bank and other references. The way to make a fortune in mining is by prospecting, where the work is honestly done and this plan insures a square deal for all; a number of men already in the field under a competent mining engineer and outlook for big things is most flattering; better than mining stocks in every way. 8

THE CHEAPEST WAY TO GET SOMETHING IS TO FIND IT.
AN UNUSUAL OPPORTUNITY IN A 20TH CENTURY IDEA.
After years of experience it was determined that the best method of acquiring mining property at the least possible cost was to maintain, under supervision and accompanied by an assayer, a number of prospectors of known ability and integrity, whose compensation is an interest in the properties they find. With this end in view a few mining men organized a company and for the past 8 month have kept prospectors in the field both in Nevada and California. The result of their efforts and the property found is of such a flattering nature that it is the desire of the originators to enlarge the operations both as number of men and equipment. Under the present method there are no salaried officials. The company is organized for $25,000 with shares at a par value of $1 and no stock has been issued at less than par. This stock is now offered for sale to carry out the plan of enlarged operations at the price of $1 per share. This is worthy of the most careful investigation. The best bank and commercial references will be given and we will be pleased to go into detail if you care to interest yourself with a strong company in a legitimate and winning enterprise. Address M, box 157, TIMES OFFICE. 18

WOULD YOU INVEST $2500 IF CONVINCED that you would receive 50 per cent. on your investment yearly, besides your money back, for a period of three years? This is no "wild cat" scheme, but a proposition of GENUINE MERIT, open to the most searching investigation. Your money secured by deed to real estate; no services necessary. We would advise any one with this amount of capital to invest, to at least take the time to call or address us upon this proposition; you will not be disappointed. REMEMBER it is no speculative scheme, or mining deal, but a business proposition in the strictest sense. For full particulars see

SEARCHLIGHT—
With two railroads building into this famous district, great activity in the various stocks of the district is anticipated upon the completion of these two roads, which are expected to be finished before spring is over. Additional equipment and machinery will be forwarded for the Searchlight-Parallel Company's mines this week and the main shaft sunk direct from the 400-foot level to the 500-foot. The ledge at the 400-foot is over fifteen feet in width. We do not know of a better investment at the present time than the shares of the Searchlight-Parallel Gold Mining Company.

These Two Letters Tell Their Own Story

LOS ANGELES, CAL., Feb. 17, 1906.

SOUTHWESTERN SECURITIES CO., Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen—I accepted a position of Director and Secretary of the Long Beach and Arizona Mining Company only because I believed it was a meritorious enterprise and one that would become profitable to all of its stockholders.

The property is well situated in the Black Hills mining district, four miles from the United Verde Mine and only eleven miles from the big Custom Smelter, known as the Humboldt Smelter.

While a member of the Territorial Legislature of Arizona and while acting as Probate Judge of the county of Maricopa, I came in contact with a great many different Arizona mining propositions, and have been interested in a great many, but I do not believe that I have ever been interested in a mining proposition that offerell such excellent advantages and seemed so sure as the Long Beach and Arizona Mining Company's property, known as the Raw Hide Mine.

I am hopeful that we will be able to open up this property during the next few months to such an extent that we can haul our ore down to the Custom Smelter at Humboldt to have it treated, and I see no reason why the expenditure of eight or ten thousand dollars will not make a big mine out of this property. Wishing you success, I am, yours very truly,

F. C. Jordan

Sec. Long Beach and Arizona Mining Company.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Feb. 17, 1906.

SOUTHWESTERN SECURITIES CO., Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen—In making our agreement with you today whereby you agree to act as fiscal agents for this company, I wish to say, the Long Beach and Arizona Mining Company is incorporated under the laws of the Territory of Arizona. The stock is fully paid up and non-assessable. Five hundred thousand shares of the stock was issued to me and my associates in payment for the property. The balance of one million shares was placed in the treasury.

Myself and associates have owned this property for the past seven years and during that time have done some little work from time to time, but as yet have been unable, from lack of funds, to open up the property and put it on a producing basis.

I have been over this property time and again and I know that it is good. We have hesitated about selling any great amount of stock as we are naturally anxious to keep as much in the treasury as possible. We have decided, however, to let you place two hundred thousand shares of this stock, the money from which will, we believe, put the property on a producing and paying basis.

The property is situated so close to Senator Clark's United Verde Mine and bears such unmistakable evidence of becoming a valuable mine by development that I have no hesitancy in advising my friends to become interested with me in this property.

I will say in addition to this that it will be the policy of our company to develop the property as rapidly as we can and to put it on a paying basis at the earliest date possible. We will furnish a report monthly of the development work done and endeavor at all times to let the stockholders know the exact condition of the mine.

I do not think that you will have any trouble in selling this little block of stock in a very short time, and I believe that those who buy it will find it a profitable investment. Yours very truly,

F. H. Brown

Pres. Long Beach and Arizona Mining Company.

OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS. The Long Beach and Arizona Mining Company is incorporated under the laws of Arizona—capital stock $1,500,000—shares fully paid and non-assessable. President, F. H. Brown, identified with mining in Arizona for the past ten years—for the past two years, superintendent of the Black Hills Mining Company; A. E. Brown, Vice-President, a prominent real estate dealer of Long Beach; T. C. Jordan, Secretary, Senator from Arizona for years—Probate Judge of Maricopa county for four years; C. E. Nathhorst, Manager, employed chemist for eight years by Senator Clark, at the United Verde mines. Directors: Otto Pearson, prominent merchan, of San Francisco, and Monroe Redding, real estate operator, Long Beach.

RAW HIDE GROUP OF GOLD MINES. Now being developed by the company. Located in the Black Hills Mining District, Jerome, Ariz., the richest mining district in Arizona (on the same mineral belt as the great United Verde mine.) The group consists of seven full mining claims (one hundred and forty acres of land.) Owned free and clear by the Long Beach and Arizona Mining Company, a corporation organized under the laws of Arizona, with a capital stock of 1,500,000 shares, par value $1.00, fully paid and non-assessable, 1,000,000 shares in treasury, which will be sold as required for development. The board of directors have authorized the sale of a limited amount of stock and every dollar will be honestly expended to develop this group of mines.

DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY. The main shaft is down about 100 feet, and a hoist has been installed and sinking is now progressing rapidly. Expert mining men estimate we will have to go down two hundred feet to reach water base and pay ore. The ground is the finest for work, breaks well and stands with little timbering. We have sufficient water within a quarter of a mile for camp and reduction purposes.

There is enough timber on the ground to last for several years. We are only twelve miles from a large custom smelter, with a good down grade road all the way.

We fully expect, with the expenditure of $10,000 to $15,000, to put the property on a dividend paying basis.

FACTS TO BE CONSIDERED. The property of the Long Beach and Arizona Mining Company is located in the greatest mining district in Arizona, and Arizona is one of the richest mineral countries in the world.

The company is actually and actively engaged in developing its property.

The company has a good treasury fund.

The company agrees to keep out of debt and make its management honest and economical.

The directors are and shall be men of good business judgment and reputation.

There was a time when investments in mining stocks and mines were considered hazardous but today, owing to the improved methods of working the ore, money put into mining stock is counted among the safest and and best investments, and certainly is one of the shortest routes to fortune.

For further particulars call on or address L.B. & A.M. Co.

READ REPORT AND ASSAY. By Chas. Nathhorst, E.M. (Mr. Narthhorst is one of the very best mining men in Arizona. He is a graduate of the best mining schools of Europe, and was employed by Senator W. A., Clark as chief assayer and chemist for eight years.)

JEROME (Ariz.) Aug. 25, 1905.

T. H. Brown, President, Long Beach, Cal.—Dear Sir: You have asked an express of opinion from me, as to the value of the Raw Hide group of mines, situated in the Black Hills Mining District, Yavapai county, Arizona, about 8 miles in a northerly direction from Yager station, on the Prescott and Eastern Railroad (a broad-gauge railroad connecting with the Santa Fe system,) and the same distance from the city of Jerome and Senator Clark's great United Verde mine.

There are three distinct veins on this property, paralleling each other, the main ledge being twenty-four feet in width and is situated on the Raw Hide mine, the other two leads are about nine feet wide and located on the Paradise mining claim.

The outcrop of mineral indication is a honeycomb quartz, Limonite (oxide hydrate of iron,) Hemitite (oxide of iron,) Jasper, with a limited amount of sulphides.

These ledges carry excellent values in gold, and some silver, as can be seen by the enclosed assay report.

The surface values of these ledges have to a great extent been deprived of their value by nature's gradual leaching process. This condition of nature is what the mining man prefers, as it indicates rich sulphides of a permanent nature, when water base is reached.

The principal work of development has been confined to the Raw Hide ledge, where a shaft has been sunk to a depth of 100 feet and a cross-cut has been run in a westerly direction from the 75-foot shaft some 50 feet. In the cross-cut there are two distinct talegouges, one on the hanging and the other on the foot wall side of the ledge, and the filling of the two is of a porphyritic and ironiferous textures, and the walls are altered granite. The broken up and decomposed conditions in the cross-cut convinces the miningman that a additional depth is necessary to encounter the permanent ledge. As the formation between the walls is soft, it should not take long to uncover the vein at water base.

As to water and timber for mining purposes it is well

In conclusion, I am prepared to say that this group will a great producer if properly developed. Respectfully

CHAS E. NATHHORST, E.M.

FACT AND COMMENT.

JUST one real estate agent in this city reports as his own, personal experience, and all within the space of a month, eighteen pieces of property which he had listed in his office by the owners, actually sold to bona fide purchasers at the listed price, and money up to bind the bargain, in which the owners backed square out and refused to confirm the sale. Most of these instances were in the case of property listed without any formal contract authorizing the sale. But in several instances the property had been listed in the most formal manner, and a written authorization given, signed by the owner, to sell the property at a listed price. Of course, where such written authorization was held by the agent, he could have compelled the delivery of a deed had he wished to incur a lawsuit in order to maintain his rights. He, however, thought it preferable to lose his commission and let the sale go, rather than go to the trouble, delay, and expense of an ugly lawsuit. Now, this is clearly and absolutely wrong on the part of the owners of the property. It wrongs the agent in flatly cheating him out of his commissions, which he has justly earned by the trouble he has gone to show and talk up the property, leading up to a sale. It also injures the buyer, by cheating him out of what he considers good value for his money, or he would not have made the purchase. There may be extenuating circumstances in some such deals. The property may have been listed so long ago that values may have changed very much in the locality where the property is situated. In such a case the agent is more to blame than the owner, unless he noticed the date of the listing of the property, and if it was a considerable period of time ago he should have confirmed the price before making the sale. But there is no doubt that many owners of property within a week after they list a parcel with an agent, change their minds and refuse to confirm the sale when reported to them as made.

The Wild Boomer to Blame.

Now, a great many real estate agents have themselves to blame for these conditions, more than any other person. It sets them wild to have any one suggest that there can be any limit to the value of any piece of property situated anywhere inside or outside the city of Los Angeles. Any suggestion that the future is more or less discounted, any suggestion that revenue-earning ability is to be taken into consideration in fixing the value of a piece of property, any suggestion that the speculative edge is at all taken off of anything they have for sale, is resented fiercely, and as if it were a personal affront to the individual agent. Little wonder then that the holders of property take these agents at their own word, believe that property has not reached the top notch of possible value in any particular instance, that it will enhance in value very rapidly, and that by holding it a week or at most a month they will be able to obtain a higher price than they are offered at the present time. Naturally, holders of property do not look favorably upon accepting a price today and signing a deed for a piece of property which will be 10, 15, 20, perhaps 25 per cent. higher in ten, fifteen or twenty days. This is a view of the subject which this department has tried to put before the eyes of agents particularly during the last few weeks. Just as long as they talk so wildly that property is bound to go higher and higher, just so long they are encouraging every holder not to let go of his property, and thus they are standing in their own light and interfering with their own business.

To Sell or Not to Sell.

To parody Hamlet—to sell or not to sell; that is the question. Many holders of property do not care to put a price upon their holdings at all. In certain instances this policy is entirely justifiable. It may be the wisest policy in the world. The man of large means, who has central business property in the city of Los Angeles, that property being improved in a suitable manner and paying even 4 or 5 per cent. net income on what it could be sold for today, is justified in holding if that property is his; that is, if it is paid for, or even if the incumbrance upon it is only moderate and the note has a considerable period to run. But it certainly is within the bounds of reason to point out that the holder of central business property unimproved or inadequately improved, bringing in little or no revenue, would better sell all or part of such property at the prices ruling at this present time. If the owner does his duty, and puts anything like what he should put, 60 or 70 per cent. of the real market value, upon that property, and then if we take into consideration interest at 5 per cent. not upon the price of the property, it must plainly appear that the future enhancement in value upon that property must be quite rapid to keep pace with the loss of interest and the cost of the taxes. It certainly would seem to be the wiser course to accept the present ruling prices, so enormously higher than those of five or even three years ago, and invest the money in other property well improved, and returning a reasonable income upon such investment.

Property Not First-class.

The enormous growth of population in the last five years, and the corresponding growth of business has very naturally extended the business center of the city very widely. It may well be questioned whether there is not a tendency to extend the business center a little too rapidly. Granting that the population of Los Angeles is to grow during the next five years as it has during the last five years, that will hardly call for the improvement of all the frontage at present included in the prospective business center of the city. It is but a few years since business of any considerable volume was done below Seventh street. There is no doubt that during the next five years a great extension will take place in that section of the city lying south of Seventh street from Los Angeles street on the east to Figueroa street on the west. But will the expansion of the next five years stretch retail business within the limits marked out above, as far south as Sixteenth street? Within these boundaries are nearly one hundred city blocks. It certainly would seem to be the wiser course to accept the present ruling prices, so enormously higher than those of five or even three years ago, and invest the money in property well improved, and returning a reasonable income upon such investment.

[illegible] Not First-class.

The enormous growth of population in the last five years, and the corresponding growth of business has very naturally extended the business center of the city very widely. It may well be questioned whether there is not a tendency to extend the business center a little too rapidly. Granting that the population of Los Angeles is to grow during the next five years as it has during the last five years, that will not call for the improvement of all the frontage at present included in the extensive business center of the city. It is but a few years since business of any considerable volume was done below Seventh street. There is no doubt that in the next five years a great growth will take place in that section of the city lying south of Seventh street, from Los Angeles street on the east to Figueroa street on the west. But will the expansion of the next five years stretch retail business within the limits marked out above, as far south as Sixteenth street? Within these boundaries are nearly one hundred city blocks. That is nearly twice the frontage at the present time included in the real business center of the city. We have now 200,000 inhabitants. If the growth in the next five years is as great as it has been in the last five years, in 1910 the population will be about 300,000. That is, there will be about 50 per cent. more business accommodations required at the end of that period than are required now. Now, there is the equation before our eyes.

Another Consideration.

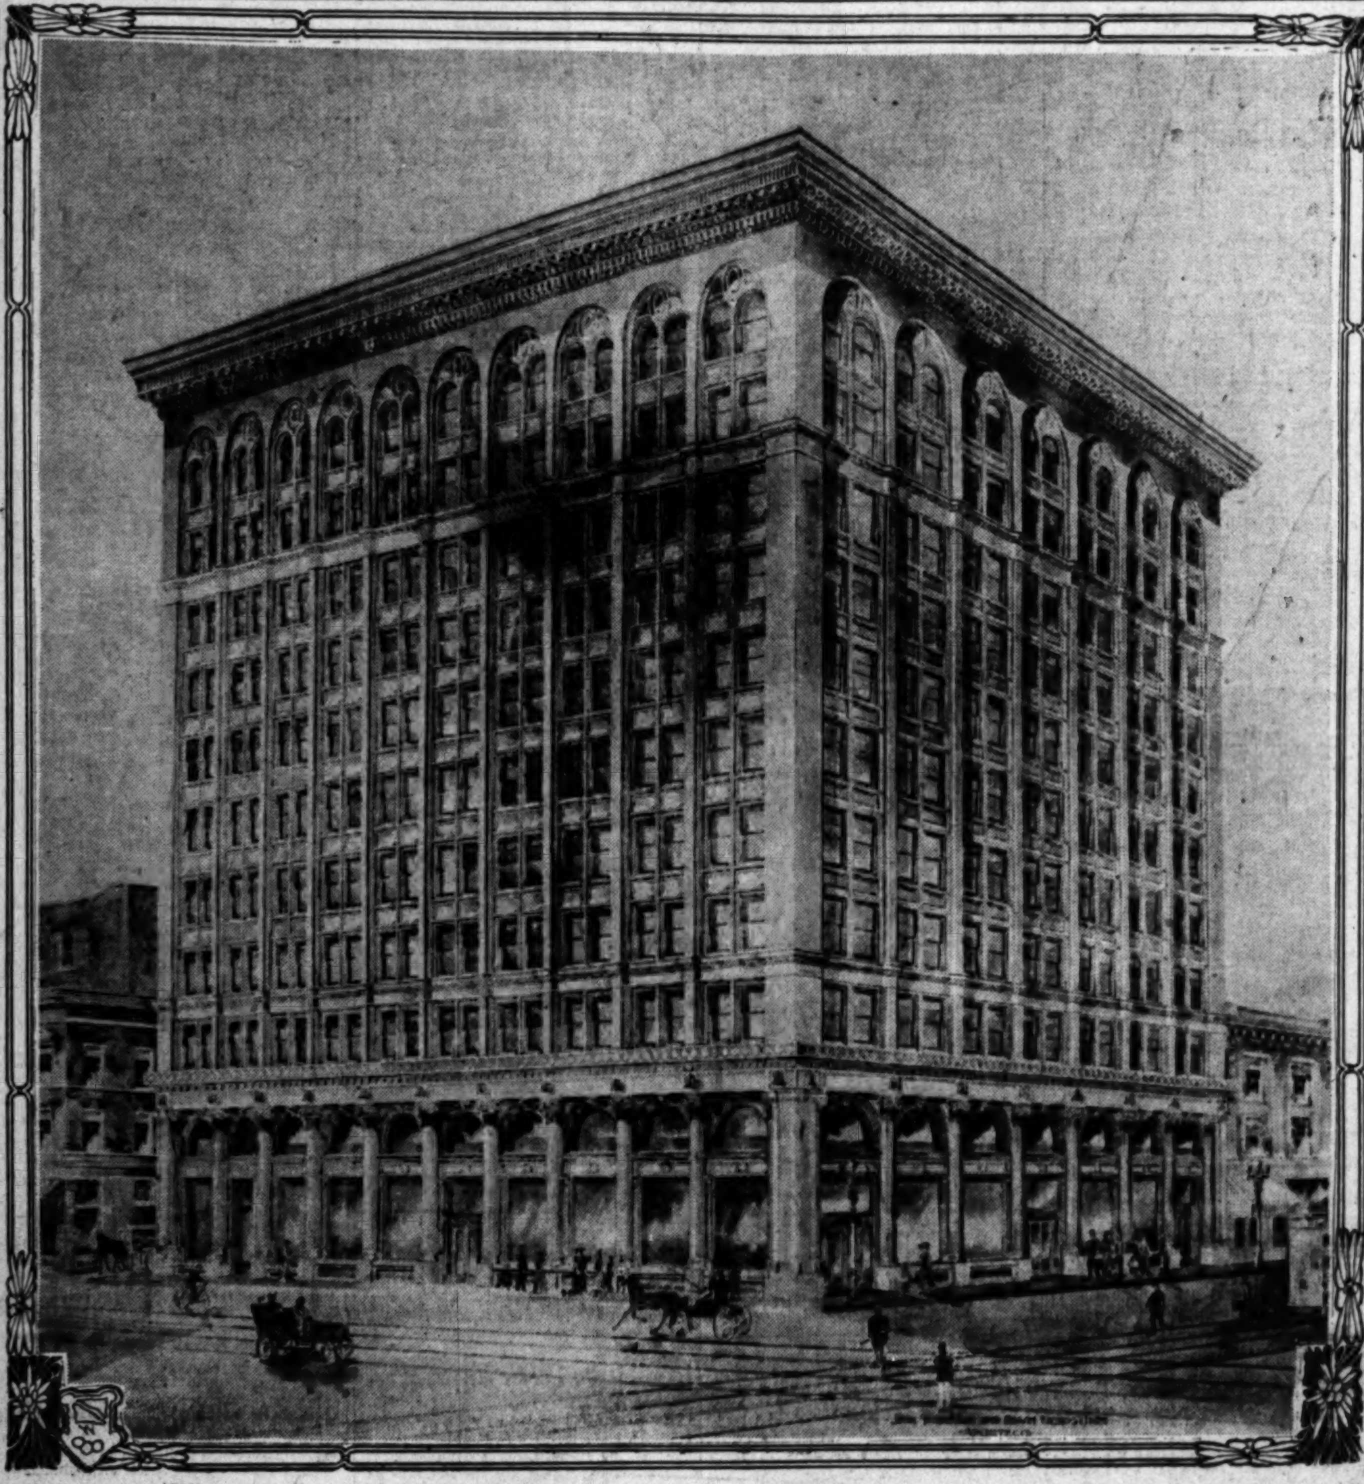
And yet that is not the whole equation. Five years ago nearly all the retail business of the city was carried on within the business center properly so-called. At the present time there is a very large percentage of the retail business of the city done in places far remote from the business center. In whatever direction one goes along the main arteries running north and south or east and west, the corners are very generally occupied with stores of one kind or another. Last year it was Pico street almost alone. This year it is Washington street. Next year it will be Jefferson. Within the past two or three years business has expanded along Central avenue 'way down to Sixtieth street. It has spread along First street out into the oil wells. Along Temple street the same. Downey avenue is a busy center for retail stores of every kind. Over on Boyle Heights business places are multiplying, particularly along First street. It will be but a short time when this will take place along Stephenson avenue. The whole tendency of modern city living is to dot the whole city over with retail business on nearly all the corners.

As to Residence Property.

The disposition to hold on to property with a tight grip, engendered in the minds of the owners by the unwise clamor of the agents, is not confined to business property of the first, second, or third degree. Owners of residence property have imbibed the same notions. Perhaps in certain cases those who hold fine residence sites for a further enhancement in value may not be so very far wrong. Shrewd business men of experience in real estate, who come from other cities, say our business property is held too high, and that there will come a reaction sooner or later from the present very high prices. They say our best residence property is too low. They look at it in the concrete, and say they find no property here of a residence quality, even the most fancy, held at above $125 per front foot for lots of such ample depth as frequently prevail in Los Angeles, from 150 to 175 and often 200 feet. They insist that such property in the most select districts of the city, where improvements are of the best class, will be worth more money. But looking at the matter in a general way, there can be no possible doubt that multitudes of these unimproved, residence lots must remain unproductive because unoccupied for a great many years to come. The area covered by the city limits proper is a very large one. Even 500,000 inhabitants would not by any means call for the improvement of all these lots. It must be remembered that as population grows here it will become congested in the manufacturing and business centers. Detached houses will not prevail in such localities. Flat buildings housing a dozen families, apartment houses performing similar services, boarding houses and small hotels will take the place of the cottage and two-story house occupying the center of a fifty-foot lot; so that as the population grows larger it will become more congested, and the average hundred or thousand persons in the population will not occupy the same number of square feet in the city area as before the congestion took place. Even when the city has 500,000 inhabitants there will still be many unoccupied building lots in all parts of the city, excepting close to the business and manufacturing centers. That number of people will not be found in the city of Los Angeles within ten years. To hold a lot ten years means that it must more than double in price to justify holding it.

The City Limits.

Now, there is another consideration. The city limits is a purely imaginary line as related to this question of population. The boundary line delimiting the city from outside territory may exist upon the map, but in actual, practical life H. E. Huntington's trolley lines have wiped it off of the face of the substantial earth. These electric railroads make such good time that multitudes of people will prefer taking an extra quarter of an hour to come from their homes to their business and to return again to their homes in the evening, rather than remain with a family of children cooped up in a flat in the congested districts of the city. This climate, with its eternal sunshine and balmy airs, is very provocative of a cottage, however modest it may be, set in the center of a piece of ground 50x150 feet, rather than remain in a six-room flat, without a square foot of yard or a blade of grass to grow or a child to play in the sunshine. The number of building lots laid out outside the city limits is larger perhaps than those laid out inside. When there shall be within the radius of ten or twelve miles of the Plaza 1,000,000 human beings, all these lots will not yet have been occupied. Now, it is all very well for the enthusiast to talk about 1,000,000 inhabitants, as if Los Angeles would attain to that growth "in two shakes of a lamb's tail." That number of people will not be found within the radius referred to much before dead lambs shake their tails.



Noble pile for Spring and Fifth.

MAGNIFICENT PILE PLANNED.

The Immense Building to be Erected on the Southeast Corner of Spring and Fifth Streets.

The picture which illuminates this page of the real estate department of The Times this morning shows in perspective the plan of the great fireproof building about to be erected on the southeast corner of Spring and Fifth streets. The area is 120 feet on Spring by 160 feet on Fifth. The height will be all that the city ordinance will allow, 150 feet. It will be literally ten stories high, but the first or ground floor story will be the height of two ordinary stories, making the building really equal to an eleven-story structure. This building will be erected by the Central Fireproof Building Company, composed of A. C. Bilicke, R. A. Rowan, James H. Adams, Thomas W. Phillips, J. S. Torrance, Maurice S. Hellman, and J. F. Sartori.

The syndicate named above, which is to erect this magnificent pile, say that it is with deliberation they have taken the name of the Central Fireproof Building Company, and that this building will be absolutely fireproof in all its features. The frame-work will be what is known as fireproof steel, and the contract has already been let for this part of the work. The other portions of the walls all through the building will be either steel lath or hollow fireproof tiling. There is still a little question as to which material will be used. It will probably be hollow tiling. The outer walls will be unglazed tile. This will be similar to the material used in the Homer Laughlin building on Hill street. In the interior in the corridors the walls and floors will be entirely of marble, not simply marble wainscoting, but marble to the ceiling. The floors all through the building will be of concrete. The halls, like the corridors, will be, throughout the building, entirely of marble. The only wood used in the building will be in the doors, door frames, and window frames, and it will be altogether mahogany.

The architects who have drawn the plans and will supervise the erection of this magnificent structure are Parkinson & Bergstrom. This firm has built a great many of the finest business structures in the new city of Los Angeles. They have brought to bear upon the planning of this building all their experience and skill. The syndicate for whom it is erected have set before their eyes the ambition of giving Los Angeles the finest business block west of Chicago. There will be no city in the whole West which will have an office building more solidly built, more absolutely fireproof, nor more splendid in all its appointments than this new building in Los Angeles. Taking the whole western country together, there will scarcely be half a dozen structures to compare with this. Its cost will run not far from a round $1,000,000.

The magnificent ground floor, with the height of two full stories, will probably be used for the counting house of some bank. While those who are putting the building up are reticent about the matter, it may be said to be an open secret that the Security Savings Bank will occupy the ground floor of this magnificent pile. There are two reasons for surmising that this will be the outcome. In the first place, the owners of the building are intimately interested in the Security Savings Bank. It will be very natural that they will desire to erect a banking room for themselves, after their own plan, and just to suit their business. Their own bank will be as good a tenant as they could expect to find. The other reason is that the banking rooms now occupied by the Security Savings Bank in the Hellman building, are understood to be very much desired by the owner of that grand pile for his own bank, the Merchants' National. H. W. Hellman, during the period in which he has presided over the destinies of the Merchants' National Bank, has built up and developed this business in a somewhat marvelous manner. The premises now occupied by that bank on the corner of Main and Second streets are known to be inadequate for the business of the institution. Mr. Hellman's own building, on the corner of Fourth and Spring streets, in the premises now occupied by the Security Savings Bank, would afford an ideal place for the transaction of the growing business of the National Bank.

The nine stories above the ground floor in the new building pictured here will be used as offices. These offices will be fitted up with every device known to the modern art of building, to afford the patrons of the company every comfort, and every convenience and facility found anywhere in an office building.

The architects for the building add the following points as to its construction. The frame will be what is known as standard steel frame, the floors concrete, supported on terra cotta or concrete arches. The front will be what is known as dull glazed brick, exactly like the Los Angeles Lighting Company's building on Hill street. The base will be polished granite. The entrance, walls and ceilings, will be of Numidian marble, a handsome red stone from Northern Africa. The stairs throughout the building will be marble. The corridors will have marble wainscoting seven feet high throughout, all English-vein, Italian marble. The interior will be either mahogany or fumed, quarter sawed, white oak. All windows rear and front will be plate glass. The lighting will be probably the very best in any building on the whole coast, as all rooms are to be outside rooms, having no interior court, a recess to the south 50x68 feet lighting every room not looking directly on the street. This also will give from every room excellent views. The main entrance is 20x70 feet, and will be furnished with five of the best hydraulic elevators made in the world. There will be a large freight elevator in the rear. The plan of the building is of extreme simplicity, affording direct access to all the offices, which will be very large and so arranged as to permit of cutting them with partitions, so as to afford privacy to the occupants as well as convenience to the public.

EL EMPORIO.

A Giant Department Store Planned for Broadway, Seventh and Vincent Streets—Work Begins.

Some months ago John Grosse of Chicago, while visiting in this city bought several pieces of central property and leased others for a long term of years. Among these leased parcels was the Lankershim corner on Broadway, Seventh and Vincent streets, 106x144 feet. Mr. Grosse returns, and after seven days of hard work secured the lease of the Frankenfield lot adjoining those on Broadway on the north, 35x144 feet. This gives an area of 140x144 feet, surrounded by three streets, two of them main thoroughfares of the city.

The work of erecting a thoroughly modern building will begin at once, and will cover the entire area as given above. The basement will be twelve feet in the clear, and above this will rise a thoroughly fireproof building of either six or seven stories. The architects, Parkinson & Bergstrom, have already been retained to make plans for this gigantic building. The work upon it will begin at once, and it is the intention to have the structure completed by October of the present year. The building will be used as a department store, and will be known as El Emporio. A cousin of John Grosse, Charles E. Grosse, is in the city with associates at the present time, and they will be the proprietors of this modern department store housed in this magnificent modern structure.

John Grosse incurred no small difficulties in securing this aditional area for his building. It is evident that he let no grass grow under his busy feet, to remove every obstacle and within seven days from his arrival close up this important lease. The details regarding the department store will be found elsewhere in The Times this morning.

We have a syndicate partly formed to take up one of the best propositions of subdivision that has come to us for a long time. This is where you can get in on the ground floor and secure a one-eighth interest for $1500. This is a proposition that will make you a return of double your investment or a full profit of $1500, within 12 months. This will stand the strictest investigation and fact and figures will prove absolutely to you that this is a rare proposition. We will submit the matter in detail to you on calling at our office.

OLIVE STREET.

$1100 per Front Foot.

A glance will convince you of the exceptional value of this property—55x165 feet, between 6th and 7th streets, on the west side of Olive. No property in the city at this price has a better immediate future.

FIFTH STREET.

An exceptionally low price piece of property on East Fifth st. near Los Angeles st., finely improved with three-story modern brick building, with cellar. The property is now netting an income of $347 a month, and is one of the best pieces of income property in the city at the price we are quoting.

EIGHTH STREET.

This is an opportune buy—50x100 feet, near Hill st. on Eighth. There is a 7-foot right of way on one side and in the rear, making the lot accessible to two streets. This valuable piece of ground is improved with a three-story building, and can be rented for a term of five years or more netting 7 per cent. on the entire investment. The price of the ground is only

Apartment house on corner TEMPLE and HOPE. BRICK BUSINESS block on cor. OLIVE and TEMPLE. 10-story BANK building on corner SPRING AND TEMPLE.

Improved property on this HILL also pays BETTER returns on investment than elsewhere; indeed, the rents are GREATER than where lots are selling at DOUBLE the price asked here.

This proprty if improved with first-class apartment houses would pay 10 per cent. on DOUBLE the present price of the lots. It follows, therefore, that it must and WILL "double" in MARKET value.

90-acre ranch near Fullerton, Orange county, Cal. If you are looking for one of the best ranches with the very best improvements; in the very best part of the world, this ranch should suit you exactly.

There are on the ranch 20 acres of oranges, mostly Washington navels and Valencias, of which eight acres are in full-bearing, and 12 acres just coming into bearing; 26 acres are set to English walnuts, for which the land is admirably adapted, and 8 acres are in grapes just beginning to bear; the remainder of the land is in corn, barley and other crops. The soil, which is principally a black sandy loam, is very rich and productive and in high state of cultivation. Trees and vines are very thrifty and in first-class condition. Ten shares of water stock in the Anaheim Union Water Co., go with the land. Ordinarily this is an ample supply for irrigation, but in addition to this there is a 12-H.P. pumping plant in 10-inch well, 518 feet deep, with an inexhaustable water supply. Cement reservoir, ditches, etc., for use in case of an emergency.

The building is a very elegant 10-room, 2-story, modern house. Halls and dining-room finished in solid oak and beautiful inlaid floors. The very best material and workmanship are apparent throughout, but the house must be seen to be appreciated. Then there is a large, commodious barn and all necessary outbuildings. The grounds around the house are beautifully laid out with walks, drives, ornamental and shade trees, lovely flowers, etc., In short, it is a magnificent home, good enough for President, Prince, potentate, or any other man or woman. The owner is getting along in years, family grown up and gone away. He wants to sell, and offers this place for $25,000; $10,000, or even less, in cash, and balance to suit at 6 per cent. It is very cheap at the price; already pays a good income, and as the trees grow older the income will be largely increased each year. A FIRST-CLASS PROPOSITION FOR A FIRST-CLASS MAN. Lake County.

FOR SALE—

IN LAKE COUNTY—
Self-supporting homes can be bought for less money than in any other section of the State. Comparing land values with other counties, the homeseeker will find here the best lands cheaper and the cheap lands better than elsewhere.

IN LAKE COUNTY—
All the typical products of California can be grown. Deciduous fruits of all kinds reach a perfection found nowhere else. Apples, pears, prunes and peaches are grown largely and sold at high prices. Lake county pears command a substantial premium over all others. No blight or insect pests here. Among things grown and sold at good prices in our home market are berries of every kind, melons, table and wine grapes, figs, almonds, walnuts, and garden vegetables of every description. The field crops are those common to every section of the United States. And no irrigation is used or needed to bring these fruits and crops to full maturity and perfection.

IN LAKE COUNTY—
There are no fogs, no cold winds, no extremes of temperature, either in winter or summer. Thirty inches rainfall, 300 sunny days in a year. There has never been a crop failure in the history of the county. Not a foot of alkali or "hardpan" in Lake county. Streams run the year round, and the valleys are green far into the summer.

IN LAKE COUNTY—
There are beautiful lakes and streams, alive with trout and other game fish. In its forests are thousands of deer, and its valleys swarm with quail and small game, while wild ducks and geese frequent its lakes in season. The county lies 1300 feet above the sea, and its climate and numerous medicinal springs and health resorts attract thousands of visitors every summer. It is a natural sanatorium and pleasure ground.

IN LAKE COUNTY—
Homeseekers of either large or small means can find paying investments and homes that will support them. There is hardly any line of business that does not offer a good opening at some point in the county. A pamphlet entitled "Lake County in a Nutshell" gives a fair and honest description of our resources and advantages, and will be mailed, with any other information asked for, to those desiring it by the undersigned, County Supervisors.

FOR EXCHANGE—
M'DONALD & STOTT,
309-310 Lankershim Bldg.
(Cor. Third and Spring sts.)

We have returned; we, the sign writer, who was away last week, and we know you missed us, of course. But we have returned and have now served up for you this Sunday morning, some of the choicest and most attractive things which ever came into our office. Come after such of these as appeal to you, and be as pleased as is Fred Pearson of Ocean Park, for we have closed an exchange aggregating a total of $158,000 during the past week, by exchanging Mr. Pearson's White Star Pier and land interests at Ocean Park to Dr. J. M. Crenshaw and James A. Seelye of Redlands. Both sides got a good trade and are likewise happy. We can and will do the same by you if you will but come in with your property and tell to us what you want. We want you to know that we can trade any real estate on earth. One of our choicest deals last week was an exchange of 1000 acres of improved wheat land in the great wheat country of Manitoba, Can., for Martha A. Thomas, to Charles R. Church, for a walnut grove at Riviera. Mr. Church wished to go to Canada, and Mrs. Thomas was desirous of remaining here. This deal aggregated $47,000. Each side got what they wanted, and both are benefited.

We have long been telling you we do things in selling and exchanging, and the "sooner" you come, the "quicker" we will do things for you, and you get what you want. All of our clients are pleased and satisfied with our work. We do good work. If you cannot come in and speak with us about it, write us; give Uncle Sam 2 cents and tell us a full description of what you have and want. We will get it for you, and get it quickly.

Everything in this column today is new, and has never been offered to you before, with the exception of that clear and valuable apple orchard land at Canyon City, Colo. We want to exchange enough of this for a clear orange grove, amounting to about 10,000 gold dollars, and this property is so good, clean and clear of all incumbrance, that we cannot take it out of our list this month. We have had many offers for this property, but none of them have come up to its value, and therefore we still have it to offer you. Think the owner would consider other property in Southern California, but they prefer an orange grove.

We have property in New York City, comprising some of the best-known buildings in the metropolis, aggregating in value $1,050,000, with gross rental income of $230,732. For anyone wanting New York City property of almost any value, we think we can supply it out of this bunch.

We have a seven-room house, mission style, on E. 30th st. We want to exchange this for vacant or acreage, clear of incumbrance. This is well located in Los Angeles, and a good trade for some one.

We have six residence houses, well located in Braddock, Pa., with about 40,000 population, and a suburb of Pittsburgh. Braddock is the home of the great Edgar Thompson Steel Works, one of the subsidiary companies of the United States Steel Company, and employing thousands of men. This property has an income of $936 a year, with a very small expense. It is always rented, and is for exchange for Southern California; San Diego city property would be especially pleasing.

We have a stock of goods, invoicing at $12,000, in one of the best localities of Southern California, for retail business. The owner of this stock wishes a stock ranch in the northern part of California, or in Oregon and will assume or pay some cash difference.

We would like a good lot in the west or southwest, on which we may turn in two first-water flawless diamonds as part payment. One of these gems weighs about one carat, and the other two carats. We will pay the balance in cash.

Two lots with a modern brick nine-room residence on Broadway, Van Buren, which is five miles from Fort Scott, Ark. The building cost $3500. We also have with this an 80-acre rich cotton plantation near the same place, which is "dirt" cheap at $50 an acre, to exchange with cash for a residence in Los Angeles, or we would accept a suitable suburban country property.

We have 20 acres of finest alfalfa land, excellent improvements, with two flowing artesian wells, cement reservoir, the most valuable twenty acres in the San Jacinto Valley, and we want to exchange this for a ten or twenty-acre orange grove in good condition. Don't offer it unless it is in good condition, and frostless, and we will pay or assume a cash difference.

We have two residences in Syracuse, N. Y., a city of about 150,000 inhabitants. We want to exchange these for Los Angeles or near-by residence. For a clear piece of property we can give some one a fine trade and make you a lot of money.

Here is a fine six-room modern, new bungalow, on King st., high ground, worth $4000. We want to exchange this for Berkeley, Oakland, Alameda or San Francisco residence or cottage, and will assume or pay some cash difference.

We have a splendid residence, W. 49th st., Los Angeles, seven rooms and bath, two stories, beam ceiling, everything modern, $4000, which we would like to exchange into vacants. This party will give a good trade, too. This owner can also put in an eight-room house, not quite completed, under construction, on W. 49th st., near Figueroa.

We have a brick block, including the operahouse, in a good live New York State city, worth $12,000, that we want to exchange for Kansas land. We want improved Kansas if possible.

Two-story, six-room house, rents for $25 a month, natural gas, paved street, house in good condition, four years old; $2800 is the price of this place; at Muncie, Ind., to exchange for Southern California.

We have one-quarter section of land in the heart of the Red River Valley, Minn., all under cultivation, at $35 per acre. We would like to get a chicken ranch for this. If we cannot get a chicken ranch, any other kind of a ranch that will stand investigation will be acceptable, if it is in Southern California.

We have two lots, value at $800, and 150 shares of lumber and coal stock, guaranteed to pay 7 per cent., and in a prosperous company, to exchange for Southern California. Prefer Los Angeles vacants or equities.

We want an offer of Southern California property for a controlling interest in a 100-acre subdivision in the city of Havana, Cuba. This controlling interest is worth $39,500. We believe this proposition will investigate and we would like to exchange it for Southern California property. It is estimated that this Havana allotment will net from $250,000 to $300,000.

We have some very choice Chicago residential and income property to exchange for Los Angeles or Southern California.

We have for exchange a business building with an income of $4920 a year, 10 per cent. on $49,000, located at Goldfields, Nev. United States postoffice occupies a part of the building, under a five-year lease. New and clear of all incumbrance. We want to exchange this into good Southern California property. Would accept equities in good property in Los Angeles. This property is a snap at the price it can be had at, $15,000. Iowa property would be particularly pleasing.

Any property we offer you will bear investigation. Bear that in mind. Don't forget now, as we have been telling you, we have the best trader in the United States. Come in and get acquainted with him. Put your burdens on his shoulders and be happy. Send in the list of your property for sale or exchange. You will have quick action and honest treatment. We want you as our client. Will you do it?

We own and offer for sale three million dollars of municipal bonds, 4 to 6 per cent. interest. We collect accrued interest without charge on all bonds we sell. Will loan the face value of any bonds we sell at the rate of interest such bonds bear.

"A ROOMING-HOUSE SNAP."
All new furniture in a new building, in a good location, has always paid from $100 to $175 per month above all expenses; have the documents to prove this. It is nicely arranged in 2 and 3-room suites. The rent is low, only $3.50 per room; the lease is long, 3 years. It is very easily managed, the occupants doing the work. Here is a nice, clean money-making proposition and it will stand investigation, but the owner can't give it his personal attention and has consequently named a price and terms that will cause a change in ownership very soon. You can buy this place for $4500, and you might trade him your house and lot or a nice little grove or ranch not too far out. Better see me about it today.

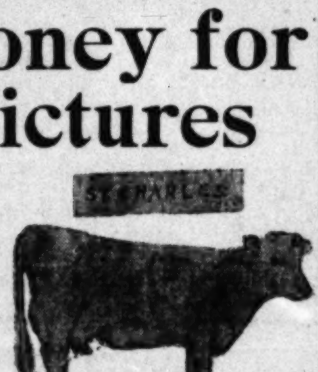
More Money for Cow Pictures

Cow Talk



The boys took almost all the prizes this week, so girls you'll have to hustle. The cow drawing will continue for some time yet; that's the way most of the votes came in and we're glad of it. We like cows—good cows, that's why St. Charles Cream is so good, don't you know. See, I have moved to a new barn. My new one is nice and long, lots more room 'cause business got so big we had to move. Folks are finding out there's no cream so good as "St. Charles" or "Silver Cow." I'd like to have 150 pictures this week. Don't make any difference if you have sent one or two before. Just so you didn't get the $5 prize, you can try again. But don't forget the label of a "St. Charles" or "Silver Cow," your name, address and name of school you attend, and remember to send it to my new address as below.—THE COW MAN.

I want every store to keep my kind because it's best, and there's nothing too good for my little friends. It's 10c, you know, for the 15c size cans. Try it.

JAPS BACKING THE BOYCOTT?

So Says American Just Back From the Orient.

Common Sentiment Among Foreign Residents.

Nevertheless China Must Buy Our Products.

"That the Japanese are behind the Chinese boycott of American products is the common sentiment among foreign residents in China," said H. A. Moore, who arrived in San Francisco from Shanghai on the steamer Doric. Mr. Moore has been in China for the last fifteen months traveling over a considerable part of Chinese territory which made him acquainted with conditions.

"While the boycott is ostensibly a protest against our exclusion laws, it is not so in reality; it is only an excuse for the anti-foreign sentiment engendered by agitators. The boycott as a boycott cannot last," continues Mr. Moore, to a Call reporter. "Of course, we export great quantities of American products to China, but our heaviest exports are flour, kerosene and cotton goods. The world's trade, exclusive of the United States, cannot supply the demand in China; she must have our goods. When the boycott was instituted the flour trade was the heaviest hit and has given Australia an opportunity to market her flour. Kerosene was the next heaviest sufferer, and then came the cotton goods. The boycott was fairly effective until early in December, when trade began to revive, the Standard Oil doing a business somewhat approaching normal. Then came the anti-foreign riots in Shanghai, in which there was an ugly time for several days. Those riots arose over a trivial matter—so trivial that it is now believed that the anti-foreign element had been waiting for some pretext on which to make a demonstration.

"A woman and a few girls had been arrested for some trivial offense amounting to a misdemeanor, in the foreign settlement. The Chinese magistrate claimed jurisdiction over the prisoners and the municipal or foreign settlement made an adverse claim, based partly on the fact that the Chinese had no jail fit to contain European women. The mixed court, or the magistrates of the different foreign nations within the settlement, passed the case along to the British magistrate, who decided to hold the prisoners. The Chinese magistrate sent a squad of police to demand the prisoners, and in the event of refusal to deliver them, to take them by force. They tried it, but failed. There was a lively scene, in which there was considerable clubbing, but the foreigners—Americans, Germans, British and French principally—kept the prisoners in their custody.

"The native press in Shanghai is controlled by the Japanese, and the papers at once made a great to-do about the case. Those agitating the anti-foreign sentiment employed coolies and rowdies to enter the foreign settlement and start a riot. It had previously been announced that all Chinese stores in the foreign settlement would close their doors on a certain day. The day came, and only a few of the stores were closed. Then the rioting began. The coolies and rowdies, armed with clubs, bricks and stones, went about the foreign settlement smashing the windows and doors of Chinese stores and several were looted. The Chinese police were permitted to cope with the situation until the rioters turned their attention to the stores conducted by the foreigners; then the real trouble began—for the Chinese. The rioters had possession of two or three of the main streets in the settlement and had looted one or two foreign stores when the foreigners took action. Americans, Germans, Britons and others armed themselves, a few marines were landed from some of the war vessels and several pitched battles were fought in the streets. The next day an American gunboat arrived from up the river in answer to a hurry message and landed marines also. About forty Chinese were killed before the rioting was quelled, but for several days the foreign merchants went to and from their places of business with rifles over their shoulders.

"Since that time there is doubt as to the seriousness of the situation. The native press made a great to-do about the holding of the prisoners and the resultant riot, and the tension has since been great. There is no doubt also as to the temper of a great majority of the Chinese. If they dared they would drive every foreigner out of the country, and all they lack is leaders in order to attempt it. Much of the anti-foreign sentiment is due to the students, many of whom have been to Europe and this country for a year or two, and returning try to do things as foreigners do them. But they lack leaders.

"A gang of coolies may meet a foreigner on the street and begin throwing bricks at him. If he runs they will chase, and if they catch him will use him roughly, and perhaps seriously injure him; but if he has a gun and will fire one or two shots at the mob it will vanish more quickly than it appeared. The rickshaws of several foreigners have been overturned and their occupants painfully hurt. There is no doubt as to the ability of the untold millions of Chinese to dispose of the foreigners if they had leaders. The only thing to do is to afford Americans and European residents protection. If the tension grows more strong it may be necessary to send sufficient men over there to put down any riot that may originate.

"But back of it all, it is believed over there, stands Japan. When the boycott was originated it was only at American goods; since the in Shanghai in December the foreign feeling has been general victory of Japan has had much to with this sentiment. Chinese 'Look at Japan; look what she done. We no longer fear any Eu pean or other power.' Japan's cess in the war with Russia aroused China and the influence Japan in Chinese affairs is tioned. With the native press eral of the larger Chinese control of the Japanese, this ence will be far reaching. it is evident that the exclusion is only an excuse for the there is something deeper. What time will tell, but in China a pretty fair demonstration it may be. It is practically ble to find out the facts from —they are absolutely inscrutable when any man says he knows a Chinese will do next, he mancing."

Correspondence New York Sun:] Skilled men are employed to travel through the woods on snowshoes all winter for the purpose of estimating the value of the growth and to pick out sites for lumber camps. Through information furnished by these men the proprietors of the timber lands are able to fix the stumpage rate to be charged.

Cruisers is the name by which these men are known. They go for weeks at a time without seeing a human face. They carry their food in packs strapped to their backs, and sleep under shelters before open fires built in the snowdrifts.

"There's no need of a healthy man going hungry in the Maine woods," said Orion Southworth, who has served as head cruiser for William Engel for the past eight years. THE CALDWELLS WHY THEY

A Reminiscence of an ley Family, One of W in the County Jail fo tling.

Caldwell's ranch was a tongue of the Mojave Desert, a bay of that ocean of sand indenting the foothill coast line. The reason for its existence was a trickle of water in an "arroyo" at the head of the bay. By throwing a slight earth dam across the bottom of the arroyo, the trickle was converted into a water hole, and possession of the water hole gave Caldwell command of several square miles of half-barren range on the hills constituting the desert frontier of the Los Alamos Cattle Company's wide domain. Caldwell permitted none but his own cattle to drink at the water hole; or, more accurately, perhaps, he claimed as his all cattle that watered there.

It was the tradition of the district, not wholly in jest, that when Caldwell located a quarter section of desert adjoining the Los Alamos range he started in the cattle business with one steer and a rope, and "let nature take her course." A bunch of two or three hundred cattle wearing Caldwell's "pig-pen" brand—a running iron variation of the Alamos brand—spoke eloquently of the kindness of nature to the trustful Caldwell.

The Caldwell ranch was a singularly desolate-looking place. Backed against a low hill of barren gravel, an unpainted house, two stories and a half high, with a steep pitched roof, stared upon the desert through sashless windows, like the sightless eyes of a dead man. Mrs. Caldwell's ambition, nurtured in an Arkansas shack, was to live in a white house with green blinds, and Caldwell was "aiming," as he said, to gratify her long-cherished desire when she "up and died." Building operations stopped, the sashless upper-story windows were boarded inside, and Caldwell and his three boys camped solely in the rooms on the lower floor. The house was set upon posts some four or five feet above the ground, for no apparent reason other than to furnish an excuse for a front porch and flight of steps. Fortuitously, the space beneath the house offered a shady retreat for pigs, chickens, hounds and other small live stock. Except that given by a fringe of dwarfed willows around the water hole, there was no other shade on the Caldwell ranch, or within sight of the place in any direction. There were no buildings other than the house, unless a rough corral of stockaded yucca logs might be considered a building.

My first call at the Caldwell place was on a blazing day in September. I had been searching the edge of the desert for a small band of antelope, said to have been seen there, a remnant of the once numerous Mojave herd, and my horse needed water.

As I rode up to the house, I saw Caldwell, a tall, gaunt, sandy man, sitting on the floor of the porch, his back propped against a post and his knees drawn up to his chin, calmly smoking a corncob pipe. One of the boys sat on the steps, where he could command a view of the interior of the house through the open doorway, and was so absorbed in something going on within that he paid no attention to my arrival.

The old man removed his pipe and waved it toward me in a gesture of greeting, while three or four hounds sniffed lazily at the horse's legs and eyed me with that profound solemnity that is seen only in the countenances of hounds and Supreme Court justices.

"Light stranger!" said old man Caldwell, and as he spoke a shot was fired inside the house. "Three," said Caldwell; "fetch him that time, Bud?"

"Mary fetch," chuckled Bud on the steps, peering eagerly through the door. "He ducked it again."

"Dick never was no good at wing shootin'," mumbled Caldwell between teeth set upon the pipe stem. "Snap shootin' with a pistol is a trick some folks can't never learn, ain't it, stranger? Four!"

Another shot echoed through the house, and Bud reported, laconically: "Missed."

By this time I had dismounted and was trying to see what was going on inside. Half-way up the stairs leading directly from the front door to the second story crouched a young man, who held the spoke of a wagon wheel in his hand. Just as I caught sight of him he stamped on the stairs to imitate the sound of one running up, raised his head cautiously to the level of the upper floor and ducked quickly just as a fifth shot rang out. A lock of red hair fell from the top of his head, and he put up a hand tentatively to his crown. Instantly he repeated the remarkable maneuver, and was rewarded with another shot, which missed entirely.

"Six!" shouted the man on the stairs, as he bounded up to the second floor, and immediately there was tumult in the house. There was the sound of blows mingled with growls and curses, and Caldwell grinned and shouted cheerfully: "Jim's got ye now, Dick!" while Bud sneered: "Dick's a bum shot, as I 'lowed he was."

Presently the disturbance subsided, and Dick and Jim came down stairs, the former wiping blood off his face and looking considerably mussed up.

"You all found out which on ye owns that hound pup?" growled Caldwell.

"It's Jim's dawg all right," mumbled the subdued Dick.

"Then don't ye have no more argifying over it. If ye are goin' down to the drink to wash up, Dick, ye'd better take the stranger's horse, and water

The incident was treated as closed by all hands, and the only explanation Caldwell deemed necessary was the aside remark: "Boys will git peevish, ye know."

Some six weeks after my first acquaintance with the interesting Caldwell family, the three boys turned up at my camp in the mountains, hungry and disheveled, and made themselves at home for the night in the matter-of-course fashion of woods rovers everywhere. And, of course, they were welcome to whatever they needed.

After supper, Bud, with a very poor assumption of indifference, asked if I had seen or heard anything of the old man in that region, and all three were evidently relieved when I assured them that Mr. Caldwell was not in that part of the mountains. There was a long silence, which I refrained from breaking with the questions that naturally came to my mind. I guessed that the boys would explain in time and would talk when they were ready.

Presently Dick announced, without any preliminary: "We're hiding out," and relapsed again into silence.

In view of the prevalent belief that the Caldwells couldn't tell the difference between a branded yearling and a buck deer, when they were hunting for the market, it might have been indelicate to ask why they were hiding out or who was looking for them. If the Sheriff was after them, I preferred to know as little of their affairs as they might volunteer to tell, or even less, and I did nothing to encourage confidences.

But soon Bud began to chuckle, and something like a grin appeared on the freckled face of Jim. "It was sure funny, anyhow," said Bud, and then the story came out over pipes. All three joined in the telling, and it was a loose-jointed, jerky tale, impossible to reproduce as it was told.

A week before they turned up at my camp, the Caldwells came into the mountains on their customary fall hunt for deer and bears, bringing their hounds along. They killed a small bear the first day and found the tracks of a large one, and that night in camp they planned the next day's hunt for the big bear.

Two of the hounds were inexperienced puppies, old enough to help in a bear fight, but uneducated in the game, and Caldwell was concerned for their safety in a mix-up with a full-grown grizzly. Some dogs have a natural aptitude for taking care of themselves and keeping out of reach of a bear's paws, but green hounds, if they have courage, are likely to fly at a bear's throat or ears, which is the very worst strategy or tactics conceivable.

Old man Caldwell, therefore, announced his intention to give the pups a rudimentary lesson in bear fighting before setting them on the trail of the grizzly, and gave minute directions to the boys who were to assist him.

"I'll sneak off into the brush," he said, "and put on this fresh bear pelt, and when I come growling around camp you boys turn loose the pups and sic 'em on to me. Tie up the old dogs tight and keep 'em out of the game. The pups will go for my head, and I'll bat 'em in the jaw to teach 'em not to fool with a bear's front end. You boys encourage 'em to worry the hind end of that bear pelt good and plenty."

Such, in substance, were Caldwell's instructions to his unlicked cubs of boys, and they, of course, promised to do as they were told.

Caldwell disappeared in the darkness with the bear hide, and presently there was a cracking of brush and a growl that set all the dogs straining at their ropes and whining with eagerness to tackle the disturber. The boys promptly turned loose all the dogs, and with a full-tongued chorus the pack launched itself into the brush and fell upon Caldwell in the bear skin.

The pups went for his head as they were expected to do, but the war-wise old hounds, executed a turning movement, and fell upon the enemys' rear.

All talking, or rather shouting, at once, the Caldwell boys gave what seemed to be a pretty fair imitation of the ensuing disturbance.

"Wow! What in thunder ye doin'? Down, Tige! Goldurn ye, leggo my leg! Bud, pull these dogs off'n me! Ouch! Help! Git out, ye consarned fool hound! Sic 'em, Jack! Bat 'em in the jaw, Dad! How's them pups gittin' along, Pop? Oh, I'll skin ye alive, ye devil's brats!"

Those were a few of the vocal accompaniments of Caldwell's system of educating bear dogs. The rest were in "the tongue unknown to script," and, if I remember aright, there were some brutal semi-snarls and an "interhiss" mixed up in the turmoil.

Some of the sounds from the thicket were so intelligible to the Caldwell boys and so fraught with menace, that when the old man chucked the bear hide to the tangle of dogs and made a break for his rifle, the boys fled into the forest and kept on running while their wind lasted. The last they heard from camp was the old man's voice pitched high in profane urgings to the hounds to take their trail, and bloodcurdling threats of what would happen to them when caught.

That was why the Caldwell boys hid out for two or three weeks, and, having seen a little of the crude ways of the family, I wondered not at all at their reluctance to meet the old gentleman before his legs were healed.

CLUB UNITES FOR HOME LIFE.

Seek to Solve the Problem of Living in Gotham.

Ten Clever Men and Women Lease Stone Mansion.

Leave Congested Quarters For Fifth Avenue.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—One of the most interesting experiments in coöperative living is about to be tried by a coterie of clever men and women living in this city. They have incorporated under the technical name of The Club, and have taken a lease of the fine, old brownstone mansion at No. 3 Fifth avenue, formerly the home of Countess Annie Leary, for a term of six years.

While the idea originated with Miss Helen Todd, a bright young woman from Chicago, all of the ten incorporators enthusiastically seconded her efforts in the negotiations for the club. All the women and men interested in the experiment are working along social lines in one way or another, and, while none of them is actively engaged in settlement work, take a lively interest in it.

Besides Miss Todd others who have become members of the colony are Miss Martha Bensley, the young Chicago woman who made such a hit in her articles on "The Adventures of a Nursery Governess;" her mother, Mrs. John Bensley, of Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Scott, the latter the author of "The Walking Delegate;" Miss Teller, who accomplished such splendid work in investigating the condition of employment offices; Miss Younger, formerly socially prominent in Chicago, and who has taken a deep interest in the work of the Woman's Trade Union League, of which Miss Gertrude Barnum, another Western woman, is head; Mr. Merwin and Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Holt. Mr. Holt is editor of the Independent.

BIG AIM OF CLUB.

It wasn't with any idea of making a sensation or advertising themselves that this interesting bevy of literary folk and social workers banded together, but simply to try to solve for themselves individually the biggest problem that New Yorkers are called upon to face, the problem of living.

Miss Bensley, when seen in her apartments at No. 142 Orchard street, which is in one of the most congested portions of the city, but which has recently been a center for a most interesting colony of social workers, was quite overcome at the notion that the secret of their little experiment was no longer theirs.

"All there is to it is that we are going to move; just to pile our belonging in a moving van and transfer our household goods from one quarter of the city to another.

"We all decided that, rather than try to overcome hygienic problems down here, as well as to secure larger quarters, we would take a house where we would not be cramped for room, one which would be more accessible and still be within easy distance of the settlement quarter and where we could pursue our work and investigations with more physical comfort to ourselves.

"All there is to it is that we are going to try to work out the problem of living together. Aside from that there isn't anything to say, except that we all expect to enjoy the experiment. It became necessary for us to file articles of incorporation, as is essential, I believe, when several persons take upon themselves the responsibility of the rental of a house. It is just to be our home, that is all."

SHOCK IN TRANSITION.

Miss Bensley's apartment in Orchard street—Miss Younger also lives in the same building—is furnished most artistically, and the transition from the crowded thoroughfare outside, with its crush of push cart peddlers, to the literary atmosphere and cosy environment within is so marked as to give one the sensation of a shock. Miss Bensley is just now the head of a Russian syndicate that supplies magazines with matter relating to the revolution and conditions in the land of the Tsar.

Other clever young women who have elected to live on the east side in order to get local color or atmosphere or to work out social problems in the settlements are Miss Gertrude Barnum, who lives at First street and Avenue A, and Mrs. Rita Childs Door, who has an apartment in the same tenement. Mrs. Door is interested in writing a book on "The Needle Trades in America," and in order to get material from the main source is living and working among the women who form the great army of hand workers in the city.

Whether the club will eventually develop into something more notable than a coöperative home remains to be seen. That there is such an idea in view none of those interested will acknowledge. It would not be strange, however, if the influence of such a coterie of earnest laborers in the world's work should be as widespread as that of the Brook Farm colony, though in a different direction, as no reform of any sort will be tried.

BAKERSFIELD.

NEW PARTY ISSUES ADDRESS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

BAKERSFIELD, Feb. 17.—The public ownership party recently organized in Bakersfield, has issued an address, in which appear the following statements: "The railroad or transportation question must be settled effectually and justly. The mass-meeting of the public ownership party, called to assemble at Fresno on the 22nd of this month, will be actuated by this spirit; and for the first time in the history of the country will afford a direct way for the American people to consummate this idea.

"The public ownership idea declares that the people must own, control and operate the railroads and the railroad plants which shall carry the passengers and freight of the nation. Independent political action is made necessary. We urge you now to cast aside any vain hopes and attend the Fresno mass meeting. Any man who will declare himself for the cause will have a right to a voice in the proceedings."

The address bears the name of several residents of Bakersfield, together with John R. Haynes of Los Angeles, C. H. Castle of Merced, H. O. Smith of Porterville, H. G. Walker of Oakland, and R. A. Dague of Alameda, members of the committee in charge.

STRANGELY MISSING.

Efforts Fail to Locate Miss Annie Robinson, Who Left Home Just After Christmas.

Miss Annie Robinson, who disappeared from her grandmother's home in Kernville a week after Christmas and who is supposed to be either in Los Angeles or in this vicinity, is still missing. The grandmother, Mrs. Mary A. Robinson of Kernville, is frantic with grief over the loss of her favorite granddaughter whom she raised, and has been making every effort to locate her.

At one time Miss Robinson attended the State Normal school in this city. She is 20 years of age and bears an excellent reputation. Her relatives are unable to explain her sudden disappearance and are searching everywhere for her. She is supposed to have come to this city in search of work shortly after New Year's and nothing has been heard from her since.

HOME EDITORS TALK "SHOP."

BUSINESS AND PLEASURE TAKE UP THEIR HOLIDAY.

Heads and Friends of the Southern California Country Press Enjoy Sessions and Outing, and Decide to Journey to City of Mexico, Perhaps Next Year.

A half-hundred men and women of the Southern California Editorial Association are today enjoying the latter half of their holiday and business gathering, which began yesterday morning at the Chamber of Commerce building in Los Angeles, and which will end in Los Angeles this morning at 6 o'clock.

Yesterday's daylight was spent in considering the various needs of united journalism throughout Southern California. Two programmes were given in the Chamber of Commerce assembly room, and a varying list of talks and papers treated many subjects. Among other things, payment of regular dues is to be a new association feature.

The evening was devoted to enjoyment in Venice, a banquet being spread at the Ship Hotel by Messrs. Lawson & Eames, after which the stunts of the Midway and the brilliant music of the Ellery band came in as entertainment and diversion.

The present officers of the association were in attendance. They are D. G. Holt, Santa Monica Outlook, president; Mrs. L. J. Matthews, first vice-president; Lyman J. Matthews, Redlands Daily Review, second vice-president; Edgar Johnson, Fullerton Tribune, secretary-treasurer.

The feature of the day was an interesting discussion of a proposed outing trip of extended nature, some favoring the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and others the City of Mexico. The capital of the Southern Republic was finally decided upon, and if possible, the journey will be made in the fall.

Election of delegates to the convention of the National Editorial Association, which will be held at Indianapolis next June, also came up for discussion, and the local representative will in all probability be J. P. Baumgartner of the Long Beach Press, who will be free to go at that time.

The morning was devoted to discussions and papers concerning the practical side of newspaper life. The topics included "The Science and Ethics of Advertising," by J. P. Baumgartner, Long Beach; "The Pacific Coast Advertising Men's Association," L. H. Mertz, Los Angeles; "The Country Press," Harry Williams, Whittier; and "The Influence of the Country Newspaper in Politics," John Wasson, Pomona.

In the afternoon considerations comprised "Women in Journalism," Miss Grace Tower, Pasadena; "Competition With the City Daily," E. P. Clark, Riverside; "Coöperation in Advertising," J. C. Newitt, Los Angeles; and "The Establishment of a Newspaper," Mr. Clover, this city.

At the banquet at the Ship Hotel in the evening various felicitations passed in after-dinner speeches, given by representatives of the association, the Kinney company, and other interested bodies. R. T. Gabel, of the Los Angeles-Pacific Railway, semi-humorously described "The Free Press."

Today the association members will be guests of the Pacific Electric Railway, taking special excursion cars at 9:45 o'clock at the Pacific Electric building, and visiting the Pacific Electric beach resorts under the personal guidance of H. S. Kneedler, advertising and industrial agent of the Pacific Electric.

FIEND FRIEND OF THE GIPSY MOTH.

Deliberate Attempt That Was Made to Introduce the Pest Into California as It Has Already Been Intentionally Planted in Rhode Island.

THE ravages of the gipsy moth in the State of Massachusetts are already well known and it is not the present intention to describe a visitation that has been fully pictured elsewhere. Massachusetts for some years now has been at death grips with this pestilent insect, an insect that was introduced into America with the best of intentions, with the intention in fact of adding to the wealth of the country by providing it with a new silk producer. From a few feathery cocoons carelessly left in front of an open window and blown by the wind into a secure hiding place, a vast army of winged destroyers, multiplying with an inconceivable rapidity, has been turned loose upon the State.

The gipsy moth has become invincible from its very insignificance, and today science, with all its resources, stands almost helpless and entirely dismayed before a devouring plague which makes war upon civilization, converts gardens into wildernesses, and at a touch blights and withers every green thing, orchards, and fields and forests. It is a situation deserving the name of tragedy, because it means ruin and misery to thousands.

There is, however, no need to describe what the gipsy moth is doing in Massachusetts. That has already been done, and sufficient attention has been drawn to the offer emanating from California to apply to Massachusetts the same parasite remedy that has been found to be so effective upon the Pacific Coast against the black scale and other similar pests. The eastern experts laughed at California's methods and discredited them up to the point where they found it more expedient to claim for themselves the credit for those methods and even to make clumsy and inexperienced efforts to apply them for themselves. The story of all this has been sufficiently told and it is only now referred to in illustration of a danger that is threatening California, a danger that threatened her once before and from which she providentially escaped, and a danger that is now menacing Rhode Island as well as those portions of Massachusetts that have so far escaped the scourge of the gipsy moth. The danger is simply that of a deliberate and calculated attempt to artificially introduce the gipsy moth into California.

A VILLAIN'S SCHEME.

If the idea seem to be a far-fetched one, if it seem to involve an impossible measure of human wickedness, it may as well at once be said that the attempt has been made in the case of California and that it is even now being made in the East. Let us look first of all at the California attempt and then at what is actually being done in the East at the present moment.

About eight years ago, at a time when the war against the gipsy moth in Massachusetts was at its fiercest, a certain man arrived in Fresno from the East. He had come from Massachusetts where he had been profitably employed by the government in one of its many efforts to exterminate the moth. It evidently occurred to him that with the advent of the gipsy moth into California an entirely new industry would be created as in the case of Massachusetts. There would be horticultural boards called into existence, extermination stations would be established, and a small army of well-paid officials and experts would be summoned to do battle with the new pest. All this had been done in Massachusetts, and employment had been furnished to hundreds of men whose occupation might otherwise have been more laborious and less remunerative. If this had been done in Massachusetts why should it not be done in California, and if the gipsy moth was not to be found in California, that was an omission that could easily be remedied.

He therefore wrote to his father in Massachusetts asking him to collect a number of the gipsy moth eggs, pack them in a box and forward them to Fresno. It would then be easy to place them in some convenient tree trunk and await the inevitable development. The scheme was a charming one in its simplicity, but fortunately for California, it was divulged. The horticultural authorities were warned in good time of the fatal consignment that was on its way and it was seized at Fresno and destroyed. The heartless criminal who would thus wreck the horticulture of a State in order to secure for himself a weekly salary as an expert escaped arrest, although there was no law that could have been brought to bear in punishment of a crime of almost unthinkable wickedness and depravity.

Such, in bare outline, was an event that actually occurred, and that may at any moment recur. Indeed, George Compere said a few days ago that California's interest in Massachusetts was largely due to the expectation that the pest might be intentionally or accidentally introduced into California. This diabolical attempt attracted very little attention at the time that it was made, partly because of habitual official reticence, and partly perhaps from the fear that publicity might tempt its recurrence. The attempt was, however, actually made, as the present horticultural authorities can testify.

PRESENT DANGER.

And now let us see how this crime is even now being repeated in Massachusetts itself, and in other Eastern States. Prof. A. H. Kirkland, the State Superintendent of the suppression of the gipsy moth, said less than one month ago: "Gipsy moths have been maliciously planted in Providence and elsewhere in Rhode Island by those whose interests it would serve by having the pest in that State. There is no doubt about it and there is no law to stop it." No, there is no law to stop it either in the East or in the West. There is no punishment that could be legally inflicted upon the wretch who would deliberately inflict ruin upon a State in order that from that ruin a weekly salary might accrue to himself. We can punish the petty thief, and punish him savagely, too, but there is no punishment for the man who deliberately invokes the plagues of Egypt upon a modern community.

The Fresno attempt was made about eight years ago, and with the disappearance of that particular miscreant his horrible occupation dropped into desuetude for about five years. It is now three years since Rhode Island became the victim of a similar crime. Three years ago the eggs of the pestilent moth were deliberately planted in Rhode Island, but they did not at first take kindly to the new soil, and so it was necessary to repeat the operation. Year after year it has been repeated with skill and determination and now at last Rhode Island possesses the pest in miniature, but nevertheless in sufficient dimensions to tax her extirpating powers to the very utmost.

Now the Rhode Island authorities know who these men are; they know their names and all about them, but the scoundrels are safe. There is no law that can attack them. There is nothing that can be done except to pass a new law, and who can doubt that such a law would be resisted as an infringement upon interests? The men who are doing this fiendish work have a political pull, and they know well that when a call for experts is made they will be the men who will be chosen and who will be well paid for eradicating a pest that they themselves have created.

Even if these men were not known, it would be quite easy to detect the intentional work.

The gipsy moth cannot fly. He can only creep, and he cuts a broad and desolated swath as he goes. He could not, therefore, appear in a new district without leaving the marks of his footstep on the road, and the fact that he had appeared in new territories while the intermediate lands were untouched is good evidence that he was carried from one place to another. That, of course, is actually what was done. The interested parties journeyed into Massachusetts and collected handfuls of eggs which they deposited in trees and other sheltered places in Rhode Island, and a too complaisant nature has done the rest. Professor Kirkland says in the Boston Journal: "I know gipsy moths have been planted in Providence and throughout Rhode Island. Planted by those who want the plague in that State. We know who is to blame but we are powerless. There is no law, no law either in this State or in Rhode Island. I am going to ask for additional legislation at once. Prison bars are too good for the guilty parties."

LONG BEACH.

FRATERNAL COMPETITIVE DRILL.

LONG BEACH, Feb. 17.—The City Trustees will be asked Monday for the free use of the Auditorium, and the services of the Italian band on Friday evening, April 27, for the annual competitive drill between the uniformed companies of Knights of Pythias, Maccabees, Fraternal Brotherhood and Patriarch Militant, I.O.O.F. of Southern California for a valuable trophy, at present held by the Fraternal Brotherhood, twice winners of it. Col. Adolph of Los Angeles, who has the affair in charge, says this annual meeting brings together 300 uniformed representatives of the orders interested, and that great rivalry exists. The new Auditorium with its vast floor space free from any supporting columns is peculiarly adapted to the competition. The local Pythian lodge will promote the affair, one-fifth of the proceeds to go to the band. The attraction will be spectacular and prove a big drawing card. The evening will close with a military ball.

CITY CAMPAIGN COLD.

Despite the fact that the municipal election is less than two months away, citizens are showing an apathy and inactivity that is remarkable. The spring election for City Trustees, Clerk and Marshal will be on April 9, and nominations must be made before the 17th of March, yet no move has yet been made by the two factions which biennially strive for supremacy. Politics so far as Republicanism and Democracy is concerned, there are none, the fight being largely on whether the city shall remain an orderly, behaved, clean city, or whether it shall be "thrown open to liquor and iniquity." The present graft scandal is keeping both sides timid, and they are evidently awaiting further developments before making a stand. The new registration is also slow, only about 200 new names having been filed. Candidates for Trustees are scarce, and some difficulty is said to be experienced in getting the proper men to enter the field.

SEASHORE BREAKERS.

The Long Beach Mutual Building and Loan Association has had a shake-up in its directorate, and almost a new board elected with representatives from all the banks as follows: J. B. Heartwell, Jotham Bixby, Stephen Townsend, C. R. Drake, W. W. Lowe, George H. Bixby, C. L. Heartwell, E. H. Van Sittert, C. J. Walker, P. E. Hatch, F. C. Yeomans, Harry Barndollar, Fred H. Bixby, W. S. Steven, L. H. Smith, Frank McCutchan, J. E. Daly, W. P. Wilson, B. P. Dayman, L. A. Perce, Dr. W. H. Jones, R. Laynes, D. M. Cate, F. A. Parker, and Jesse Driskill. New officers will be elected Monday.

Signor Vassella, the new director of the Long Beach Italian Band, has been in charge a week, and the difference in the harmony and sweetness of the music is marked as contrasted with Donatelli's desire for crash and sound. Following are the programmes for Sunday's concerts at the Auditorium: Afternoon, "Tannhauser" (Wagner;) "La Schiava Saracena" (Mercandante;) clarinet solo, "Rigoletto" (Verdi;) "Carmen" (Bizet;) "Dixie" fantasie (Lampe;) minuet (Vassella;) American fantasie (Herbert.) Evening, "American Beauty" (Vassella;) "Orpheus" overture (Offenbach;) trombone solo, "Martha" (Flotow;) "Il Trovatore" (Verdi;) "La Catalina Gavotte" (Vassella; sextette from "Lucia" (Donizetti;) 'Cecilian Dance" (Missud;) music ballet from "Excelsior" (Marenco.)

The Y.M.C.A. of Long Beach and Los Angeles have arranged for a junior field meet at Long Beach, Saturday, March 3. The programme includes running, jumping, shot putting and relay racing.

The subsidence of the storm is bringing the fish in shore again, and sportsmen on the wharf today had good catches of kingfish, besides a few yellowtail and bonita.

Officer Folsom at 2 o'clock this morning found a valise and telescope grip in the depot pavilion, and took them to police headquarters. It is thought the owner boarded a car and forgot his baggage.

L. C. Gates of Los Angeles will address the Y.M.C.A. meeting Sunday afternoon at the Methodist Episcopal Church, his subject being "Abraham Lincoln."

While romping on a couch last evening a three-year-old babe of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Gray fell to the floor, breaking her right arm at the elbow.

There will be a civil-service examination for clerks and letter carriers in this city March 3. The eligible list is exhausted, and Postmaster Hirsh has had to employ an emergency carrier.

"Hotel del Coronado" is the best.

WHERE IS HER BOY?

Mrs. W. G. Williams of Twelfth street and Oregon avenue, Santa Monica, has written The Times in the hope that a brief notice may help her find her missing son, Charles H. Williams. She says the boy, who is 17, has light blue eyes and light hair, slightly curly, and is rather good looking. He left the Santa Monica dairy about four and a half months ago and has not been heard from since.

As well as East 6th St.—The Center Shot

Remember the $2,000,000 Department Store, 7th and Broadway.—Something new to you

About a million dollars' worth of property has been sold on Fifth street quite recently—East Sixth street has increased a few points—East Seventh street can be bought today at very nearly the same price that it could have been bought for six months ago. During the last four days, however, some of the most representative and discerning business men have commenced to see a little into the future of this 80-foot boulevard, which leads through the center of the business district of Los Angeles, and which long before three years have passed will be regarded as the great cross-town and central business street of this city. If you do not know what the corner of Main and Seventh streets, Spring and Seventh streets, Broadway and Seventh streets and Hill and Seventh streets, can be sold for today, then you ought to inquire of some friendly real estate agent. Why! there isn't a foot of land as far out as Figueroa street can be bought under $1500 per front foot, and yet property on East Seventh street, going through a more thickly populated district, can be bought at $500 per front foot for an equal distance east of Main street.

Buy East Seventh street property—but buy it today, or as soon as you can get it. We believe it will double in value in ten months at the prevailing prices. A double track car line on East Seventh street alone would double values, but added to these improvements will be a Union Station, costing nearly a Million Dollars, running from Fourth to Sixth streets—also Mr. Huntington's valuable improvements in the block immediately east of the Huntington Building. We have stated these facts before, we reiterate them, and in a short time from now you will see, as plainly as we can now, that these are words of wisdom, based on knowledge of how quasi-public improvements, as well as public improvements, enhance values. Keep East Seventh street property in your mind for a quick profit and do not delay your investigation.

IC'S RAP THEOLOGY.

Views of Chicago [illegible] Thinker.

Sharply Assails Can[illegible] of Bible.

Too Simple for the [illegible], He Says.

Feb. 11.—Fundamental [illegible] of orthodoxy of the Chris[illegible] including the belief in [illegible], verbal inspiration [illegible] and its historical basis, [illegible] by Prof. George Burman [illegible] the University of Chicago, [illegible] one of the most advanced [illegible] on theological questions [illegible] produced, in a book on [illegible] of the Christian Re[illegible] to be issued from the Universi[illegible] press shortly. [illegible] compiled after a score of [illegible] work, and predicted by Uni[illegible] Chicago professors who have [illegible] advance sheets "to prove the [illegible] religious book of the [illegible]" and to occupy "in theolo[illegible] analogous to that of [illegible] 'Critique' in philosophy," is a [illegible] of the "authority religion"—[illegible] orthodox ecclesiasticism. [illegible] the book is an inquiry into [illegible] whether Christianity can [illegible] as the permanent religion [illegible]—"whether, as Goethe puts [illegible] but can widen into [illegible] of the universe.'"

[illegible] has been accused by [illegible] Baptists of heresy in his [illegible] and it is said the University [illegible] has been urged often to drop [illegible] the faculty of the divinity [illegible] members of the divinity fac[illegible] [illegible] strongly by him, de[illegible] that he is too far advanced a [illegible] for them and far too great a [illegible] to be dropped.

[illegible]," he declares in the pref[illegible] [illegible] mirror of the development [illegible] own experience—a de[illegible] moreover, which has not yet [illegible] done—a fact mirrored in the [illegible] follows that a multitude of [illegible] men and women are passing [illegible] experience similar to his [illegible] that a greater multitude will [illegible] bleeding feet, the same via [illegible] morrow and the day after. [illegible] and tragic, or inspiring [illegible] spectacle, according as [illegible]."

[illegible] main points is stated in [illegible] as follows:

[illegible] theological Christ still [illegible] the real Jesus of history, [illegible] alone is the life of our [illegible] instead of the fel[illegible] Christian persons are set [illegible] of salvation, and [illegible] religion of historical occur[illegible] substituted for the invisible [illegible] made by persons. [illegible] 'Christianity is a [illegible] religion,' is superficially true, [illegible] false. It means that [illegible] a religion of historical [illegible] a religion of facts, but [illegible] values are timeless."

[illegible] the net results of his [illegible] canonicity of the Bible, [illegible]:

[illegible] scientific and his[illegible] [illegible] local and per[illegible] [illegible] a word, has all the [illegible] human composition. From a history of the origin and fixation of the canon, it is clear that the apriori declaration of the coincidence of canonicalness and immediate divineness has no historical support. From both points of view, the way the Bible came about, its constitution, its origin, its history, witness against its immediate miraculous derivations as set forth by authority religion."

His reference to miracles follows:

"To the scientific understanding of the world, and to the intellectual habitude superinduced by science, a miracle cannit be admitted. Miraculous narratives like the biblical, originating from no observers who possessed sufficient knowledge of the relations and laws of nature to have a right to pronounce upon such matters, have no scientific importance. And the orthodox exaction of 'faith' in such stories out of all relation with everything we know, must forever be no less antagonistic to the higher activities of true faith than it is stultifying to science and to common sense. An intelligent man who now affirms his faith in such stories as actual facts can hardly know what intellectual honesty means.

MIRACLES INCREDIBLE.

"It is customary to commend faith in the miraculous as the only faith that is in a position to give God the honor which is due, to lay hold of His grace, to recognize the glory of Christ, to appropriate the fruit of His life and death, and, amid universal uncertainty, to find a firm rock on which one may stand. This is an illusion."

Referring to the importance attached to the bodily resurrection he writes:

"The importance attached to the bodily resurrection is out of all proportion to the evidence therefor. The narratives yield a fluctuating image, which eludes all assured evaluation. Shall we base our highest and holiest religious life on an occurrence of which no one can make a perfectly distinct picture? And is it, indeed, necessary that we build our salvation on this occurrence?"

After discussing the relation of Jesus to the ideas of the men of his time, Prof. Foster writes, in the last chapter:

"Deeply as Jesus participated in the ideas of His people; certainly as He expected no breach with Judaism, any more than Luther with the Catholic church; continuous as He was with the past, He yet was Himself a new creation and the great liberator.

"His was not book religion, but experience religion. As religion is not cult or institution, so it is not dogma, nor formula, nor theory. Religion is too simple for the theologians. They cannot teach religion any more than they can teach the grass to grow, birds to sing, or lovers to love."

[STAFF CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN DIEGO, Feb. 17.—The directors of the Chamber of Commerce have instructed the Railroad Committee to enter into negotiations with the managers of the Salt Lake Railroad to extend its line from Riverside to San Diego, it having been rumored that the road intends extending its line to the celery fields of Santa Ana. The feasible route will be by way of the Temecula Valley, through Fallbrook and Escondido. The committee will also ask the Santa Fé what amount of money is to be spent by the road in improvements between here and Los Angeles.

The following sales are reported by Arata & Stark: William Schlageter to L. O. Wilson, lot on Towne avenue near Vernon, 48x140 feet, $725; Bowen & Dolton to F. B. Ellenbecker, lot on Vernon near Main street, 40x135 feet, $1000; B. A. Arata to B. Laubenheimer, lot on Woodlawn avenue near Fifty-first street, 40x127 feet to alley, $800; J. F. On Pico Heights.

Franklin C. Holmes buys from John Ramsdell, the Ramsdell & Bennett lot 51½x140 feet, on the northwest corner of Pico and Berendo streets, unimproved, for $8400. The buyer will improve with three-story brick building at an early date.

This Pays Interest.

In these days of so stiff a real estate market, with somewhat of boom qualities in many deals, every transfer is not made on a basis which will show a fair margin of income to the buyer. There is a large element of speculation in many deals. One is reported closed by the agency of Mines & Farish, which shows an unusually large income on the investment. Mrs. Juana Larronde sells to a local investor a lot 70x135 feet, improved with a good basement and two-story building known as No. 128, etc., North Spring street, at $1500 a front foot, or $105,000 for the property. This will yield an income of at least 1 per cent. a month on the purchase price. Good for what some call the decaying end of the city.

Near the Center.

Alexander MacKiegan has just sold for the Huntington Land and Improvement Company a lot 90x187 feet, on the east side of Main street, between Seventh and Eighth, for $135,000. This property adjoins the four-story building formerly owned and occupied by the Hulse-Bradford Company, and now occupied by Brent's Furniture Company. The improvements consist of an old building which will be removed in the near future to make place for a new structure, plans for which are now under way. The purchasers were A. W. Nash, O. E. Farish and William W. Mines. The owners were represented by Clark & Bryan.

New High Near Temple.

J. J. Shore has sold 1[illegible]x100 feet on New High street near Temple for $60,000. It is vacant property. Again the "decayed end" scores a point. This is nearly $330 a foot.

On Central Avenue.

Frank E. Walsh has sold, through the agency of F. J. Steele & Co., twenty-five feet frontage on Central avenue between Fifth and Sixth streets, for $10,000. William R. Butler, the well-known capitalist, is the buyer.

To the West.

Building the city beautiful.

BUILDING THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

Three Residences Recently Completed Out on Raymond Avenue, Now Happy Homes.

The illustration on this page is typical of what is going on in hundreds of places in the city of Los Angeles these winter days—winter so called. At Nos. 2734, 2740 and 2744 Raymond avenue, N. F. Stokes, within four months, has built these three houses, and they have been quickly taken by newcomers who flock here in tens of thousands to seek homes in beautiful Los Angeles. These houses were bought respectively in their order named above at the following prices: $6000, $7800 and $6500. They are built on lots 50x145 feet each. The style of the houses is plainly evident from the illustration used here. The inside finish is of a very high order, all the floors on the lower story being in oak, and on the upper in maple. The houses have handsome mantelpieces, beamed ceilings in the principal rooms, built-in buffets, and all the accessories of a comfortable, modern house.

These three houses are selected from the fact that they have all been built and secured as homes by newcomers in so short a time. There is nothing singular about this incident. It is a continual occurrence in this city, growing so rapidly and being built up in such a beautiful manner. All over the city may be found block after block where similar triplets of homes may be found, either just finished, being built, or about to be begun. During the past year more than 6000 homes of different classes were constructed in this city. In the month of January the building permits called for an expenditure of $1,300,000. February is quite keeping up the record, the first third part of the month showing over 500 permits issued, at a cost of over $500,000.

ACREAGE BOUGHT.

John F. and Laura S. Hughes has sold to a local syndicate, through the agency of Cunningham & McGonigle, eighty acres on Boyle Heights; consideration named, $60,000. It is the intention of the purchasers to subdivide and place this tract on the market at popular prices and easy terms. There will be a proper building clause.

Arletta F. Davenport has sold, through the agency of Ralph M. Watson, fifteen acres of improved land just out of the townsite of Toluca, for $4000, to the Florence Home, incorporated, a branch of the Florence Crittendon Home, which will improve the said property with a $10,000 orphans' home. Work will begin at once.

Holman & Campbell, Casa Verdugo, North Glendale, report the following sales in Glendale Boulevard tract: To a local syndicate, seven and one-fourth acres, $6460; Henry M. Binford, three and one-half acres, $4000; E. Griffith, three and one-half acres, $2332; Catherine Koch, one and three-fourths acres, $1880; M. M. Gillespie, one and one-half acres, $1560; Fannie McNutt, one and one-half acres, $1560; Lillian Dyer, one and one-fifth acres, $1075; E. H. Edwards, one acre, $765; M. L. Keeler, one acre, $955; Ewell Kendrick, one acre, $955; Grace Dennerler, one acre, $860; C. M. Walton, one and one-third acres, $930; J. L. Siedzinaski, one and one-third acres, $1650; Martin Marzdorf, one and three-fourths acres, $1100; Henry Frerk and Charles Klopfer, two and three-fourths acres, $2700; C. M. Walton, two lots, $600; Monroe Walton, one lot, $300; McLennegan, five lots, $1500; Walter Dow, six lots, $1950; Lillian Dow, two lots, $900; total, $31,032. All lots are 50x195 feet.

THE KING EDWARD HOTEL.

A New Hotel, Magnificently Planned, on the Corner of Los Angeles and Fifth Streets.

This is an American hotel, although with such a very English name, don't you know. It is being erected for a Los Angeles syndicate by Architects Parkinson & Bergstrom, Mr. Parkinson being largely interested in the venture. The building occupies a ground space of 100x140 feet, and is six stories and basement, affording 150 guest rooms, café, and all similar accessories of the fine hotel. On the ground floor will be three large stores. The building is equipped with two fine passenger elevators, and two freight elevators in the rear. There will be a telephone in every room. The floors throughout the house will be mosaic, and the finish fumed oak. The lobby will be elegantly finished in beautiful marble, and the office counter, also of marble, will be one of rare beauty. The building is absolutely fireproof, there will be no inside rooms, and it will be run on the European plan. The handsome outlines and substantial nature of the building are clearly indicated by the cut on this page of The Times. It is said that the furnishings of this hostelry will cost not less than $50,000. An interesting detail of this building is that all the materials going into the structure were made in Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, from its large tourist travel now practically covering the whole year round, is a city which requires unusual hotel accommodations. The hotels in this city at the present time, numerous though they are, are every one filled to their utmost capacity. It is the aim of the builders of the King Edward Hotel to give the city another hostelry which will fully meet all the requirements of fastidious travel. The fireproof construction and beautiful finish and handsome furnishings promise to make this a very attractive hotel. It is not a large one, but is indeed a handsome one. Its situation near to the great passenger depot certainly would seem to be a good one to attract many tourists arriving by every train in the city.

NEW LAUNCHES FOR NAPLES.

The coming season at Naples and Alamitos Bay promises to be a busy one from a boating standpoint, judging from the number of elaborate craft now being built in the local boat garages. In the boat yards A. M. and Al Parsons are having elegant motor boats built to be launched within ten days. These boats are of the torpedo type, being twenty-four feet in length with engines of the two cylinder 10-horse-power type nickled. The interior of the boats will be beautifully finished in mahogany and richly upholstered, with revolving chairs to take the place of regulation side seats. W. Sweeney, of regulation side seats. W. W. Sweeney, A. T. Jergins, E. W. Gilmore and J. H. Waybright are also having motor boats built of the same type and several canoes are now being constructed in the yards.

A. M. and A. B. Parsons report aggregate sales amounting to about $16,000 during the past ten days.

Joe Clapp has sold his one-story brick building on the same street, occupied by a livery business, to W. L. Lyman; consideration named, $3500

AT THE THEATERS.

THE principal comedian of "The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast," which will show at the Mason this week, is none other than Barney Bernard, well known to every resident lover of theatrical humor as it has been expounded upon the local stage. Barney returns as Lena, the German nurse. Dialect is of course his specialty. It is rumored that next season he is to star in "The Rollicking Girl," in which Sam Bernard is now appearing successfully in the East.

Miss Isabelle Underwood, one of the principals of this company, is to be the guest during the week of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Hinchcliffe, at their home on South Grand avenue. Miss Underwood is a niece of Mrs. Hinchcliffe.

THE WEEK.

One of the largest traveling productions will be presented at Los Angeles this week at the Mason Operahouse. It is "The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast."

The special train carrying the show will arrive over the Salt Lake route this afternoon. A large amount of scenery, many chorus girls and considerable property paraphernalia make up this spectacular show.

Isabelle Underwood is the principal singer of the aggregation, and is said to have an unusually good voice.

In response to many requests Manager Morosco of the Burbank Theater has decided to give another production of last year's brilliant success, "When We Were Twenty-one." This is made possible by the return of Harry Mestayer, who will be seen in his role, "The Imp."

William Desmond will play the role of Dick Carewe, while Blanche Hall will be seen as the lovable Phyllis. John Burton, Henry Stockbridge, Jane Kelton, Robert Homans, Raymond Manion and Monda Glendower will also appear in good parts.

The Belasco Theater will put on "The Strenuous Life," Richard Walton Tully's farce of college frivolity, for the week commencing tomorrow evening.

A football captain, lax in his studies, seeks to keep the fact away from his father, who visits him. The complications give the play its strenuosity.

The author is in the city, and the Berkeley alumni will do him honors in a body on Monday night.

"The Runaway Girl," an Augustin Daly production in New York, is to be the musical comedy of the Hotchkiss Theater for the week beginning this afternoon.

It is a good musical farce, the first scene showing a lot of seminary girls on a picnic, when Leonello, a gypsy gallant, comes on the scene and captures the attention of one, who runs off with him.

Leola Maye is to make her first appearance with this company today, playing Alice. Leo Adde will play Flipper, the jockey whom Arthur Dunn made famous.

Emir, said to be one of the most intelligent performing horses before the public, will be the star attraction at the Orpheum this week. His trainer, Luigi Rossi, has arranged some musical instruments upon which he will perform.

The Barowsky troupe of acrobats will present their comedy act, "In the Woods." J. Francis Dooley, Dorothy Brenner and Ethel Rose will be seen in an eccentric dancing act. James H. Cullen, monologuist and maker of parodies, will return after a two-years' absence.

The hold-overs are Snyder and Buckley, Mirzl von Wenzl, Baron's burlesque menagerie, and the three Mitchells. New motion pictures.

"The Jolly American Tramp" will be at the Grand Operahouse for the week commencing with this afternoon's matinée. The piece is a melodramatic comedy which has had much popular success. The principal part is played by Cliff Farrell, a well-known comedian to lovers of melodramatic entertainment.

The vaudeville bill at the Unique for the coming week will be headed by McCloud and Melville, musicians and comedians. Hallen and Rogers, Charles the impersonator, Kretzer the hoop-roller, and the Unique players in a sketch are also on the bill. Motion pictures will be shown.

"A Royal Reception" is the name of the musical skit which will be offered this week at Fischer's Theater. It will be presented by the original Fischer company, headed by Lillie Sutherland, Carl Joho, and O'Brien & West. A vaudeville bill will be headed by Joe Haggerdy, black-faced comedian, monologuist and parodist.

McClellan's New Play.

C. M. S. McLellan's latest play, "The Jury of Fate," when produced in London recently, and which is to be seen in America later, proved much less of a success than was expected from the author of "Leah Kleschna." Henry B. Irving appeared in the principal role and scored a personal triumph, but the play "in seven tableaux" did not greatly enthuse the playwright's friends. Says one critic:

"The 'rank offense' of Mr. McLellan's play is its pretentiousness. Fancy the prologue of 'Faust' prefixed to a dashing Adelphi drama, and you have 'The Jury of Fate.' The disappointment which was undoubtedly felt was due to the promise of the opening—the finest thing in the play. The scene is the humble interior in a farmhouse. Rene Delorme, a dissipated poet, hurries in, thrilled with fear and horror. A 'shadowy being,' the stranger, the messenger of death, enters. He is about to raise his sword and end the poet's life, when Rene begs for a respite, that he may live a second life better than his first. Then the ceiling of the room disappears, and the Fates, seated in the clouds, pronounce their sentence. Rene is to be given another chance. In his second time on earth he behaves rather worse than on his first existence. He takes a fancy to a pretty country girl and marries her. In the midst of his honeymoon he is attracted by a handsome cocotte, who is so much disgusted with his treatment of his young wife that she sees to it that a play of Rene's is 'damned.' Rene turns his wife and acquaintances adrift and becomes a socialist agitator. In the end he wanders into a wood and falls dead. Without being as bad as the American, who, after reading 'Paradise Lost,' asked 'what does it prove?' we may inquire of the author of 'The Jury of Fate,' what does the play mean? Does Mr. McLellan wish us to infer that, as the Austrian poet sings,

> This I know,
> I should live the same life over if I > had to live again;
> And, the chances are, go where most > men go.

"It has a weird, morbid, picturesque part which H. B. Irving had to play, and it suited his style exactly. He represented the heartless, vicious and egotistical Rene Delorme admirably."

ABBREVIATIONS AT LARGE.

Cecelia Loftus has made her London appearance in "Peter Pan" and scored a success.

Frederic Belasco and Mrs. Belasco are in New York and will sail for Havana in a few days. M. E. Mayer is taking a brief vacation at Byron Springs.

Daniel Frohman has secured the American rights to A. W. Pinero's new play, "His House in Order," which was produced in London last Thursday.

Arthur Forest has joined Richard Mansfield's company and will share the leading roles with A. C. Andrews, Leslie Kenyon, Fuller Mellish, Sheridan Block and Clarence Handyside.

The Grand Operahouse in San Diego has been purchased by Sullivan & Considine who will immediately redecorate and refurnish it, and open it as a vaudeville house.

In collaboration with Mr. Pendleton of Philadelphia, Wright Lorimer has written a new Biblical play founded upon the story of Daniel. Owing to the extra large amount of work necessary to stage such a piece the initial production will not be made before two years.

Stephen Phillips' new play, entitled "Nero," was well received upon its premiere at His Majesty's Theater, London, Eng., January 25. Beerbohm Tree played the title role, Mrs. Tree was the Agrippina, Constance Collier was the Popaea and Dorothea Baird played Acte.

During a rehearsal at the Majestic Theater, Hot Springs, Ark., last week, the trained lions used in the act of Capt. Riccardo, the animal trainer, became furious and broke from the cage which had been temporarily erected on the stage. They were recaptured after a chase of several hours.

High prices were paid for rare Shakespeareans at the closing sale of the Henry G. Denny library at Libbie's in Boston last week. A set of the first four folios of Shakespeare, containing Shakespeare's histories, tragedies and comedies, went to Frederick W. Morric of New York for $8950. These folios were printed in London between 1623 and 1685. A complete rare set of the publications of the Shakespeare Society from 1841 to 1853 brought $4837.

Clyde Fitch's latest comedy drama, "The Girl Who Has Everything," was given its premiere at the Operahouse, Cleveland, O., on February 1. The play, which is in four acts, presented Eleanor Robson in a new character. Ada Dwyer as Mrs. Waring and H. B. Warner as Philip Waring were well received. "The Girl Who Has Everything" is a play of New York life and deals with the efforts of a villainous man to rob his children and the fight of his sister-in-law (Miss Robson) to frustrate him. It all ends happily.

Viola Allen has acquired a house at No. 46 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, it is said, as a gift from her husband. The house is now being entirely remodeled and converted into an English basement dwelling. Paul Allen, a brother of the actress, who is an architect, has made the designs for the new house, and is in charge of the work. Miss Allen hopes to move from her present home, No. 27 West Ninety-third street, about April 1. Her mother and family will live with her in her new home, as they do at present.

The Shuberts have announced the plans of Arnold Daly, who from now on will be seen at the theaters of the independent managers. Mr. Daly will begin his season at the Garrick Theater, Chicago, early in April. Besides his repertoire of Bernard Shaw plays, he will present three others—a dramatization of W. W. Jacobs's story, "The Monkey's Paw;" a short play by Gladys Unger, entitled "The Lemonade Boy," and a version of Poe's "The System of Dr. Tarr and Professor Feather," presented in Paris under the title of "The System of Dr. Gouron." In the late autumn Mr. Daly will follow Julia Marlowe and E. H. Sothern at the Lyric Theater in New York.

"Romeo and Juliet" is to be burlesqued as a musical comedy. What play will now be safe from such indignity? It is to be produced at the Vaudeville, London, with Edna May as lead, and is being written by Capt. Basil Hood and Charles Brookfield, and the score is by Leslie Stuart, who composed "Florodora."—It is hinted that Capt. Robert Marshall has similar designs on "Don Quixote," and Seymour Hicks and Cosmo Hamilton have their eyes upon "David Garrick."

Charles Ross and Mabel Fenton have cancelled all their vaudeville bookings and will return to musical comedy. They will be seen in a new version of "The Winning Girl," which is soon to take the road under the Shubert banner. This piece had a brief career this season under the management of Frank Perley. Joe Herbert is re-writing the book and supplying new lyrics, while Gus Kerker is pounding out melodies. First rehearsals have been called for. Ross & Fenton played important parts.

During the performance of an operetta, entitled "The Battle of the Flowers" at a theater in Kaschau, Austria, January 27, the actors, becoming enraged because the actresses threw flowers at some of the occupants in the stalls, secured potatoes, apples, cabbages and other vegetables and presented them rather rudely to those who had been previously favored with posies. The recipients replied by breaking off the backs of chairs and throwing them at the actors. A free for all fight ensued and several actresses were injured. The police stopped the encounter, and made a number of arrests.

Disquieting reports of Mme. Melba's health come from St. Moritz and Davos Platz, where she has been seeking relief from the obstinate cough that followed the attack of influenza which interrupted her last engagement at the Metropolitan Operahouse in New York. The diva went down to Lakewood to recover from her ailment and she managed to make her concert tour in spite of her physician's advice after her breakdown. Since then she has never fully recovered her health, and the greatest physicians in Europe have united in sending her to St. Moritz and Davos, where consumption specialists conduct a sanitarium.

A site for the National Theater, which will also be used as an operahouse, was acquired February 4 in New York City. It is bounded by Broadway and Central Park west, and takes up the whole block between Sixty-second and Sixty-third streets. The title was formally transferred by the Unity Realty Corporation to Charles T. Barney, acting as representative. The price paid was $750,000. Conried will be at the head of the enterprise and the theater will be called the National Theater. The plays to be presented are to be the highest standard of art and to represent the best of all nations. In the theater there are to be thirty boxes, arranged in the shape of a horseshoe. The owner of each box is to pay $100,000 for it, and they are to be the property of the buyers in perpetuity. At 25 cents for each performance, 600 seats are to be reserved for students. There are numerous other interesting features of the National Theater which will make it unique in America.

SYMPHONIC FOURTH.

The Symphony Orchestra's fourth concert will be given at the Mason Operahouse on Friday afternoon, March 2, at which time Mr. Hamilton will present Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony, and by request will present Grieg's graphic and musicianly "Peer Gynt" suite. Tschaikowsky's "1812" overture, and three dances from "Nell Gwynne" will be played.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

WHAT curious conjunction or sun, moon, planets, shooting stars and asteroids gave temperament to Channing Ellery?

Here is the man, band maker and learned judge of music, born a New Englander of the strictest unemotional sect, and yet with all the artistic blood of Italy coursing in a melodious passion through his veins.

Ellery talks better Italian than any man in his band. One player converses in Sicilian dialect, another in Neapolitan, a third hails from "Roma Beata"—yet Ellery is a master not only of classic Italian, but has all the dialects on his tongue's end.

Ellery is the musician's delight and the bane of the business man. The American person of affairs takes art as a side-show. With Ellery the universe is built upon a corner-stone of art, and he never yields his point. Ellery working up business for his men is as pathetic as Wagner copying Offenbach music in Paris. The idea that Grocer Smith is not interested to some degree in rare Donizetti scores is appallingly painful, and the preference of Mrs. Smith and the Smithesses for von Tilzer or Cole & Johnson is equally distracting. There have been several horrible occasions where the butcher, the baker or the candle-stick maker have never even heard of the Ellery band!

Yet, he has succeeded in something which no other man has ever dared try for more than a few consecutive months. He has held a company of Italian players together, soothing, subduing, praising, mollifying or scolding, until with years of practice and constant work together they have gained a concerted technique fully equal to the foremost organizations of this character in the whole world.

The particular properties possessed by Italian musicians are all summed up in one great property, restlessness, with artistic irresponsibility. Delightful fellows most of them, with hearts as soft as the airs over the bay of Naples, they flit hither and thither, and fifty of them, unless held together by some stronger influence, would be in opposing corners of the country in less than a week.

Now for instance, in this band under present consideration, there is Decimo, solo clarinet. Built in the bulldog physique of Caruso, Decimo has abundant reserve force and an astounding technique that simply dwarfs all comparisons. Ellery, by virtue of long experience, claims that Decimo is the greatest clarinet in the world—and we haven't heard any in this part of the country who could dispute the title. Nevertheless, the delight of Antonio is to flit from one end of the union to the other, taking a job for a month, and quitting it as suddenly. The attraction of the Ellery Band is the only thing that has held him in one place since he has been in America.

Who makes the programmes, and directs the preparation of the music? Ellery.

Who works over the great operas, finding which are suitable for band production and which are not? Ellery.

Who controls the orchestration of the band, and is the harshest critic of its playing? Ellery.

Thus it will be seen that the Ellery band is magnificent because of its creator, first of all, with the long dynasty of fire-eating directors in second place.

This business of making a director is precarious and dangerous. The occupation is as perilous, metaphorically speaking, as handling dynamite, for to date none save Ferullo have succeeded in living past the swelled-head stage into peace and continued prosperity.

To each and every individual member Ellery is at once father, guide and counsellor. It is really dreadful to think what might happen to that innocent bunch if Ellery should remove himself from their midst. If a man wants to send money away it is Ellery who has to sign the order, and it is on record that faithful and hard-working paps is even called in as supreme dictator on the purchase of socks, shirts and neckties.

The Ellery band is an example of what intellectual concentration will do. Its creator has no intellect devoted to the world. Friendship and personal affairs are always second to the maintenance of this band. If a man loves Ellery but worships not the band he is no friend of Ellery's from that day forth. In attendance at every evening concert, listening intently to every number, and furiously angry if a waiter accentuates a pianissimo by dropping a bottle or rattling change, the band maker is his own eternal enthusiast, and infuses his own intensity of spirit into the minds of his instrumentalists.

There never was a Southern California audience enthusiastic enough for Ellery. The milk habits of applause and lukewarm expressions of approval do fall pretty flat after the great finale to "Boheme," or "Carmen," it must be admitted, and a few bravos, occasionally heard, only accentuate the lassitude.

Ellery has made his own soloists. That is, he has encouraged the raw material—with the exceptions of Taddeo and Decimo—and has brought genius shining out from mediocrity. Lomonte, the timid and hesitating, with a trombone tone like a pure tenor voice; Riso, the red-moustached baritone who looks like a German and plays as a singer sings, and several others, are grateful examples.

The stand-by of the band is of course little Palma, who was sent to Italy for most of the men who now complete the organization, and who has remained true to his first helper through sunshine and rain for seven stormy years—until his own place is now secure and unlimited.

Ellery is a true Bohemian. His house is the house of the "boys," and its only absolute essentials are a set of wine glasses and a piano. The piano for "papa" and the wine glasses for the rest, for he is a poor Italian, indeed, who cannot mix Chianti, vin ordinaire and paralyzing American liquors with some degree of immunity, at least.

"Papa" and the piano are inseparable companions, for here the band's great music is first made, and with the dexterous Ellery fingers flying over the keys, and the notably temperamental Ellery voice in lyric song or dramatic shout in aria and recitative the original drafts of the "Carmen," "Boheme," and "Faust" fantasias have taken first definite shape, with the orchestration left afterward to professional orchestrators in the band company—Ferullo himself being an excellent arranger.

Faithful "papa" and his kindly, child-like family of splendid artists! They are going through life together, absorbed in art to the exclusion of everything else, and making in band history as fine a record as Theodore Thomas scored for himself in the annals of the orchestra.

Kubelik Coming.

It is probable that Violinist Jan Kubelik will appear at Simpson Auditorium; during March.

When he plays here he will bring with him three famous violins, one Stradivarius, and two Amati. These instruments are known to connoisseurs the world over, and are very historical.

The Stradivarius once was the property of Ole Bull, and is one of the finest specimens of its kind in existence. It has further value in Kubelik's eyes, since it was presented to him by the Emperor of Austria.

Kubelik uses three instruments on alternate days, although when he has a particularly difficult list of Paganini compositions he always used the "Strad," as its brilliant tone and action lend themselves particularly to productions of the pyrotechnical effects in which the Italian wizard revelled.

When playing Beethoven, Bach, Mozart or other classical masters Kubelik prefers the Amati, since they have depth, exquisite purity of tone and sonority.

—o—

Piano Recital.

At Dobinson Hall, on Tuesday evening, Peje Storck and Miss Elizabeth Jordan will give a piano recital, assisted by Miss Frieda Koss, contralto. It is seldom that two such excellent interpreters of piano writings come before the local public together.

Bach, Mozart, Saint-Saens and Chopin are represented in their programme, while Miss Koss will sing a group of Schumann writings.

—o—

Gadski's Concert.

The seventh—and last—event of the Philharmonic course of musical entertainments will be the concert of Mme. Johanna Gadski, who will sing at Simpson Auditorium on Tuesday evening, February 27.

This tour is Gadski's farewell to the American public for a while, at least, as she is to join the grand opera forces in Munich and Berlin for a period of two years.

—o—

Chutes.

A varied programme is scheduled for the Chutes today, running from the performances of Dr. Carver's diving horses to Aldo's exhibition in Chutes Theater, and the music of the Chiaffarelli band.

The gap-leaping automobile will be ridden by Miss Nellie de Vaughn, and Lorena Lawrence will ride "Silver King," chief of the diving horses.

Aldo will give another matinée performance in Chutes Theater, repeating his clever half-hundred impersonations.

Chiaffarelli has prepared good matinée and night programmes. The feature of the afternoon will be "Mignon," "Tannhauser," "The Second Rhapsody," "Rigoletto" and "Lucia." In the evening the sensational ballet music from "Excelsior," "Lohengrin," "William Tell," "Saul" and Blum's "Lizilieta," are features.

Mr. Dow Coming West.

The latest artistic loss of Boston is to be the gain of Los Angeles. The following paragraphs, from one of the late isues of the Boston Globe, tell the story:

"Howard M. Dow, the talented organist, composer and musical director, after a service of 52 years as organist of churches in Boston and vicinity, has resigned his last church position and will leave Boston this week for California. He will probably make his permanent home with a daughter who resides in Los Angeles.

"There have been few persons better known to the church and concert-going public than is Howard M. Dow, and many musical artists, both native and foreign, are indebted to him for valuable aid in their public performances. He has been identified with the music platform of Boston and New England towns and also throughout the west and south.

"Mr. Dow was born March 11, 1837, on Winter street, Boston, and was one of four children, three sons and a daughter, of Mark and Charlotte (Parsons) Dow. He received his education in the Mason-street school and, like most Boston boys of that time was taught to consider music as one of the essentials of an education, and at the age of 7 years began to study singing and voice culture under the tuition of George D. Russell, who at that time kept a music store and gave singing lessons on Winter street.

"When 9 years of age Dow began to take lessons on the organ of A. W. Hayter, then organist of Trinity Church, and later, with a view of making music his profession, he studied piano playing with Hugo Leonard and composition under George F. Suck.

"His abilities as an organist were so well appreciated that at the age of 16 years he was offered the position of organist in the Methodist Church at South Boston and a little later was called to the South Congregational, Boston, and officiated as organist when Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale was installed as pastor of that church. He also served as organist at the Arlington-street church the first year that services were conducted in that edifice. From the Arlington-street church he was engaged by Hayter, the organist of Trinity Church, as his substitute during a long illness.

"At the conclusion of this engagement, in 1852, he accepted the position of organist and musical director of the Church of the Unity (Unitarian) three months after the church was dedicated, and here he remained, in his official capacity, for twenty-nine consecutive years, giving entire satisfaction and making the music of this church one of the most attractive features of the service.

"During his long engagement at the Church of the Unity, at the summer vacations of that church, Mr. Dow occupied the position of organist and musical director of the Union Church at Nahant. His next position was at the Second Unitarian Church, Copley square, where he remained five years. Mr. Dow's last position was at the First Unitarian Church, Hingham, resigning that post January, 1906.

"During the earlier years of his career he gave his time largely to teaching the piano and organ, but this occupation gradually took less and less of his time as the demand for his services as accompanist became more and more extensive. His sensitive nature and ready ability to transpose difficult musical scores at sight fitted him to take a leading position as an accompanist.

"His success in the latter position became rapidly known to concert singers, and his engagements multiplied on all hands. Concert troupes visiting Boston came to look upon him as a necessity, and as complete reliance could be put upon his accompaniments, rehearsals could consequently be cut to the shortest possible time.

"As an instance of his success in readily interpreting the most difficult scores, it may be stated that when M. Vieuxtemps, the great violinist, visited Boston, Mr. Dow was invited to accompany him at a private musicale, which resulted in so successful a rendering of the illegible score, that the violinist requested his services at all his concerts in Music Hall.

"Among the notable artists with whom Mr. Dow has been associated are Parepa Rosa, Carlotta Patti, Carl Rosa, Clara Louise Kellogg, Mme. Rudersdoff, Carl Formes, Annie Louise Cary, Santley, Edith Winn, Antoinette Sterling and many local singers and clubs of equal prominence.

"Aside from his concert and church work, Mr. Dow has won a national reputation among the Masonic fraternity as an organist, composer and choir leader, he having been a member of the fraternity for nearly 40 years. He has composed a great deal of music for the use of the order and his works are used in lodges all over the United States and Canada. He is the author of many quartets and solos, both secular and sacred, which have obtained a wide popularity.

"Mr. Dow is a 32d degree Freemason and is the organist for the grand lodge of Massachusetts Masons, Joseph Warrent and Mt. Lebanon lodges, A.F. and A.M.; St. Andrew's chapter, R.A.M.; DeMolay and St. Bernard commanderies, Knights Templar; four bodies of Scottish Rites Masons, also the Grand Royal Chapter. In all positions he has done credit to the order of which he is an honored member, and to the musical culture of Boston.

"Mr. Dow was for years organist at the lecture courses of the Mercantile Library Association, Parker Fraternity and at Music Hall and Tremont Temple.

"One of the most popular of Mr. Dow's compositions is the quartet, 'I Cannot Always Trace the Way.' This was composed while riding on a train in New Brunswick during a concert tour with the Temple Quartette. A selection was needed, as a tribute to the dead, when the quartette reached the next city. Mr. Dow found the poem in a book carried by one of the company, and wrote the music on a flyleaf in a short time. This selection is now used all over the United States.

"Of the many and varied experiences which have come to Mr. Dow during his long public career, none have afforded him more amusement than the ones when he has been taken for Ex-Gov. John D. Long. Scores of times has Mr. Dow been accosted as Gov. Long and many instances are recorded of the distinguished ex-Governor being mistaken for Mr. Dow.

"Shortly after his marriage Mr. Dow went to live in Weymouth and that town where as a musician and a citizen he has been highly honored and respected, has since been his home.

Hammerstein's Opera.

Oscar Hammerstein has practically in New York completed all arrangements for grand opera to be given at theater prices. He insists that he is not planning to give cheap opera at cheap prices, but he is relying upon the sale of the boxes to be able to give the rest of the house the benefit which he thinks possible. The Manhattan Operahouse, which is now nearly completed, is located on West Thirty-fourth street, opposite the new Pennsylvania station. The stage of the new house, according to Mr. Hammerstein, will be the largest in the city, having a depth of 85 feet and width of 125 feet; "productions requiring the stage presence of 1000 can be made." The house will seat 4000, divided thus: Orchestra, 1200 at $2; first balcony, 600 at $1.50; second balcony, 1000 at $1; third balcony, 1200 at 75 and 50 cents.

Male Trilby.

All Paris is talking of a discovery that one of the most popular singers is a male Trilby, having been literally mesmerized into fame fifteen years ago. The amazing story, which, however, is well authenticated, has just been told for the first time, apropos of a recent action by the Town Council of Marseilles. This was a refusal to allow a hypnotist named Picquard to hold a seance in their city. It seemed that Piquard is well known in the south of France, and it was at Toulon, in 1890, that he played Svengali to the singer already referred to. During a seance there, Picquard, as his habit is, hypnotized a number of the audience, drew them by his will power onto the stage, and made them sing. As a general rule they did so very badly, but among the number there was a sailor lad, named Ludovic, who sang delightfully, imitating Paulus and all the popular singers of the day. Before he woke him up again, Picquard ordered Ludovic to fetch a broom next day at the same hour, ride astride it from the other end of Toulon to the theater, and, still astride his broom, to come and sing.

Next day the hall was packed, and the road between it and the home of the singer was lined with amused spectators, waiting for Ludovic. He came, dressed as he had been the evening before, in his fisherman's cap and jersey, rode through the town on his broomstick, and sang better than ever. When he awakened he was furious with Picquard, but his anger dropped when the management of the theater engaged him to sing on excellent terms. At his debut he was a failure, owing to nervousness—there was no Picquard at that time—and his engagement was a very short one. But Ludovic was plucky and intelligent. Picquard had taught him that he had a voice, and he worked hard to train it. He sang his way up the ladder, and he is today one of the most popular singers of his kind in Paris. The name which he has taken is Mayol, and it is the fisher lad of Toulon who "created" the huge success of "Viens Poupoule" and "La Mattchiche" and earns a princely income in the Paris café concerts.

Art and Artists.

BY ANTONY E. ANDERSON.

To William Keith, Painter.

Here where the tired day steals out to sea—
Past the tall guardians of the Golden Gate
Down to the rim of Time, where rest doth wait
Within the portals of Eternity—
Dwelleth a wizard; cunning-handed he,
With seer's insight, with poet's heart;
And he hath seen and shown by every art
The soul of color, and its mystery.
To him the reaching oaks their glory show;
'Tis his to learn, 'tis his to make us know
The mystic beauty of the greenwood old;
The promise of the hills; the valleys sweet;
The golden wonder of a world complete;
The glory of a vision yet untold!

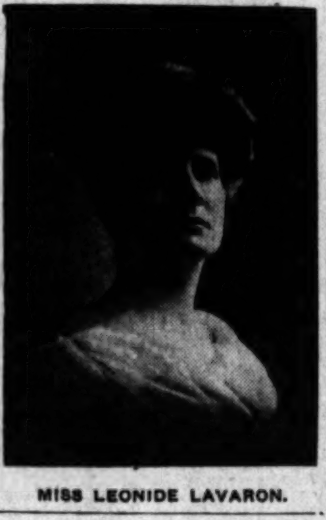
In Miss Nicholson's Galleries.

The interesting little exhibition of pictures and metal work, which has been shown in Miss Grace Nicholson's Pasadena galleries for the past two weeks, has just drawn to a close.

John W. Nicoll's California landscapes, nicely felt and well painted, occupied one wall. Mr. Nicoll also showed a few marines in his characteristic manner. There were also some well painted flower studies by Julia Leonard—those of red and pink roses being particularly good. Among the foreign pictures exhibited were some genre water colors of much charm and sentiment by Marie Perrault, and a larger and more pretentious one, "Rotterdam," by Henry Stacquet, president of the Belgian Royal Society of Water Colorists. This picture is painted in cool grays that yet sparkle with color. The effect of a rainy day is caught with great skill.



MISS LEONIDE LAVARON.

But by far the most interesting part of the exhibit is the section devoted to the art craft of Miss Leonide C. Lavaron, who is a metalsmith of distinction and originality.

Miss Lavaron began her art career in Chicago as a flower painter and a maker of monotypes. She attained much success in both these diverse fields, her rank as a painter being among the highest. Yet, feeling that she could not express herself fully and satisfactorily in the dull medium of pigment, she turned to that branch of endeavor known—and very misleadingly—as the "applied arts." As a writer in Brush and Pencil very succinctly expresses it, "The jeweler's art in its best sense is one of the fine arts."

Miss Lavaron is distinguished for her successful experiments in chemical processes, which she has principally applied to the treatment of copper in a natural, modern extension of her art. As a result of these long and even dangerous trials, she is now able to produce the beautiful iridescent surface which characterizes antique objects composed of mineral substances, such as glass or certain metals. She has given her name to the "Lavaron copper," whose beauty of color-play and surface is well supported, in most instances, by the distinction given to its shape.

None of Miss Lavaron's utensils in copper were shown in the Pasadena exhibit; instead, her work in jewelry was very fully and adequately represented.

Among the most beautiful and original of the objects shown were a tiara in a peacock motive, vari-colored gems in a setting of dull gold; a bouquet d' corsage, set with opals and olivines; an exquisite lavallier in a seaweed motive, pink coral and oriental pearls—graceful in design and most harmonious in color; also a jade Chinese necklace, whose hieroglyphics spoke of love and joy.

The rings in the collection were many and beautiful. I can cite but a few examples of those most perfect and most satisfying: A lily of the valley dinner ring, of green gold, set with pink, orange and opal pearls; another dinner ring, a pearl scarab, with oriental pearls and diamonds—the only pearl scarab ever found; and another dinner ring which Miss Lavaron calls "the sun god," which is set with a Candia ruby and diamonds.

Elmer Wachtel and His Art.

Southern California is destined to become the artists' mecca. Nowhere else is there to be found such a union of form and rich, though refined, color, luring the artist to his best effort. Its subtle beauties have formed a worthy interpreter in your midst, one who has done much to attract the attention of both layman and artist here and abroad.

Imbued with a spirit which finds its highest and purest expression in the truthful rendition of the beautiful in nature, Elmer Wachtel, has today but few peers. Nature's spirit, nature's essence, not nature's reflection, have found expression in his work in a way that all can understand. Simplicity of composition, harmony of tone, and a vigorous brush have combined to attain this end.

Among several large canvases recently shown at his studio was one called "The Course of the San Gabriel," a most dignified composition, showing distant mountains through breaking clouds, giving rise to the now almost dry river coming down to the arid and brush-spotted foreground of desert. The canvas, for breezy freshness, clean color, and forceful brushwork, is a masterpiece of art which has seldom been equalled by any California artist.

A broad review of his work not only gives the impression of a thorough knowledge of Southern California's artistic features, but also shows a feeling for the varying moods of days and seasons that can only be the result of an intense and sincere love of this country.

This insight, combined with adequate technical ability, has produced just what one has a right to expect, pictures that are in the highest sense interpretations of nature.

In his canvases one feels his sincerity. One looks in vain for effects obtained by trick of brush or spectacular contrast. Freshness, vigor and directness of definition render trickiness unnecessary. More even than mere quality of painting, one feels a sympathy and knowledge that lead him to select that which is most worthy of artistic expression.

It seems safe to predict that this southern country, with its infinite advantages, is not only destined to become the artists' mecca, but will give birth to the future school of landscape painting.

Free Art.

If it were told of the inhabitants of "Alice's Wonderland," or of that equally mythical region, the "Grand Duchy of Gerolstein," that being desirous of obtaining for their own country the greatest works of art which were in the possession of other countries, and being met with a natural reluctance on the part of those other countries to part with these, their most precious possessions, taking the form of absolute prohibition to their export, as in Italy, or export duties, as in other countries, they had, to better accomplish their purpose, placed an import duty on these very articles by way of encouraging their acquisition, the proposition would be credible. Several of the persons in Alice's country stood upon their heads and went forward by going backward, and things were no less topsy-turvy in that celebrated "Duchy." For this proposition, however, to be realized in Yankeedom, famed the world over for its common sense and its intelligent regard at least for its own interest, seems inconceivable. Yet this is a fact.

If a patriotic American succeeds in obtaining for his own country a Raphael or a Botticelli, and getting it successfully out of Italy, he is met on the shores of his own country with a customs duty, which becomes increasingly prohibitive as prices go up. This prohibitive duty, not only in its amount, but in the sense of injustice which it creates, has prevented Americans from obtaining many precious art objects, which, except for it would have been in our art museums today.

In its simplest form, that is, as applied to a Raphael or a Botticelli, or to a Greek vase, or to a Roman bronze, there can be but one intelligent opinion. They should be free of all customs charges in the present as they have been at most times in the past. A customs duty on such objects is not merely an anachronism—it is an absurdity.

Fair questions do, however, arise in defining what "art" should be free of duty under a protective system. Art objects which are simply so in name and are merchandise in fact, should not. To this category belong the legendary leaden statuettes, which immediately after arrival were promptly melted into pig. It should, however, be easy to draw a distinguishing line between art and merchandises and various suggestions in that direction have been made. The most valuable art objects, and the ones most desirable to bring into the country, are not of modern production. If the free list were extended to all such which were produced more than twenty-five years ago, a large measure of inexpediency and injustice would be removed. If upon modern pictures and statutes there were a small specific duty, or even an ad valorem duty, the maximum to be, say $25, everything of this character which fell within the category of merchandise would pay an appropriate duty, and the importation of art objects would not be seriously affected.

It is a great mistake to argue that Raphaels and Botticellis are luxuries when bought by a private owner and should pay duty, but that they can be imported by a museum without duty, as under our present laws. That a museum can import free of duty is true, but the most valuable exhibits of our American museums were not purchased directly for them abroad, but came to them through private owners who originally purchased for themselves. It is from such sources that the collections of our museums and art institutions will be largely made up in the future. If pictures or statues could be eaten or drunken by their owners, the luxury argument might apply, but as the chief enjoyment of their owners is to display them to others, and as all those others have the same enjoyment of the eye as do the owners, such an argument absolutely fails.

It is erroneous also to think of this quetion as at all a local one. Art museums are being established West and South just as in the East and North. Within the present generation no city of any size will be without one. They exist for the poor far more than for the rich, as the Sunday crowd at our own New York Metropolitan Museum will evidence. The extent of these museums, collections, and the extent and development of art education and art appreciation in this country depend very largely upon the speedy removal of all custom impediments to our obtaining for ourselves the finest art objects in the world.—[Robert W. De Forest, secretary Metropolitan Museum.

B. Stubbs, Mrs. H. D. Boyle, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Sinclair and Miss Cora Auten, respectively. There also have been the usual number of luncheons, dinners and teas.

The most greatly anticipated function of the coming week is the cotillon which will be given Thursday evening in celebration of Washington's Birthday in the Romanesque ballroom at Hotel Green. The affair will be led by Miss Mabelle Shaw, assisted by W. E. Gratin and Leopold P. H. Fisher. Thirty-two couple will participate, and unusually novel and intricate fancy figures are being arranged. The favors will be beautiful although of no great intrinsic value.

Wednesday evening, the members of the newly-organized Shirt Waist Club, which is made up of the young society matrons and maids, will be entertained at the home of Miss Ransom, East Colorado street, and upon this occasion the husbands and suitors will be included in the invitations. Cards will be the form of amusement, followed by dancing.

Among the smaller unchronicled affairs of the past week was a small but daintily-appointed luncheon, given Friday, by Mrs. Norman Bridge of Grand avenue for Miss Marie Sedlock. Dr. and Mrs. Bridge also entertained with a small informal tea for Miss Sedlock, early in the week.

Miss Angie Holmes gave a small musicale Tuesday evening in her private drawing-room at Hotel Green, to which only her friends in the hotel were invited. There were about twenty present and the programme included violin solos by Arthur Dodworth and vocal selections by Miss Georgianna Godfrey.

Mrs. Clarence B. Hall of Ford Place gave a small luncheon Wednesday. Covers were laid for six and the table decorations were white stock and asparagus ferns most artistically arranged.

The next large entertainment of the Valley Hunt Club will be the dinner given next Saturday evening, followed by cards. Bridge and progressive euchre will be provided in adjoining rooms. Mrs. R. I. Rogers will have charge of the details of the function.

Mrs. James B. Swan of Torrington Place gave a very elaborately-appointed dinner for a few of her friends who were later entertained with a musical programme.

LOCAL interest in a social way centers this week on the library benefit concert, which will be given Tuesday evening in Wilcox Auditorium, under the direction of Mrs. Nellie Hibler. Mr. Plowe will also play a solo number and will accompany Mrs. Hibler in one of her songs. Another number of interest will be that of the Hollywood Male Quartette, recently organized, which will make its initial bow at this time. Its members are James N. Black, Chester Scoville, J. B. Chamberlain and C. N. Fowler, who have good voices and make a strong organization. The proceeds of the concert will go toward the maintenance of the new reading-room and circulating library recently opened through the efforts of the Library Committee o the Woman's Club, and society people here have purchased tickets lavishly. A score of young society men will assist as ushers, and following the programme an informal reception for those taking part will be held at Mrs. Hibler's bungalow on Prospect avenue. ROUND TABLE—Where the Editorial Staff Gathers On Sunday Morning.

THE RAMBLER.

The Common Flowers.

The common flowers beside the way,
How quietly they keep a bloomin'!
Like folks we meet from day to day,
They're modest-like an' unassumin'.

There's honey there, an' lots of it,
An' how the buzzin' insects love 'em!
The butterflies an' bees'll flit
An' linger by the hour above 'em.

I love to pick a bunch 'r two,
An' put 'em in my purtiest vases;
Some minds me o' the sky—so blue—
An' some 'r sweet as smilin' faces.

They're like a good man's lovin' deeds,
So common that we hold 'em nameless;
An' so to most they're only weeds,
These wayside flowers all pure an' blameless!

The Tricks of Erato.

Is Erato, the particular muse who looks after the rhymes and meters of minor poets, really such a good friend to them as they have been fondly taught to believe? In the more spacious days, no doubt, she did her whole duty with a classic precision. For then, of course, as papyrus was expensive, there were not so many poets as today.

Since the invention of the printing press and cheap paper, however, poets have sprung up with the unhealthy haste and profusion of toadstools, and Erato's job, once a gracious sinecure, has become a tiresome burden.

Minor poets, as every one knows, are the busiest of mortals. Their eyes are always "in a fine frenzy rolling," and many of them even take paper pads to bed at night and tuck them under their pillows. As Erato's father, the mighty Jove, has been known to nod occasionally, so the fair muse herself, who is no longer as young as she was when she had Theocritus under guidance, simply has to have her beauty sleep. To get it with reasonable regularity, she has evolved a pretty little modern scheme. She whispers the same old rhyme to a dozen poets at once.

This charmingly simple plan works well for the muse, saving her much time and worry over rhyming dictionaries, but it turns the minor poets into nothing but human graphophone cylinders—and all are likely to grind out the very same strain!

This arraignment of a goddess once thought impeccable may seem harsh, but the Rambler is sure that he is right.

You have not forgotten—who could?—that profound poem beginning, "Laugh and the world laughs with you," which Ella Wheeler Wilcox hysterically declares that she wrote. These fluent verses, you will remember, were claimed as the original lucubrations of a number of other poets, all equally veracious. The controversy over its authorship waxed hot and furious, and now nobody knows (or cares) who really wrote them. The Rambler believes that all the claimants did, and that Erato was at the bottom of their so-called plagiarism.

Then, too, there is "Beautiful Snow." What a flutter its numerous comings made, over fifty years ago, and how cruelly the critics flung mud at all the unhappy poets who were its authors! Yet Erato, smirking jade, who might have cleared the cloudy sky with a word, slunk away and hid herself.

And now, in this year of grace, 1906, Prof. Roberts and Mr. Baird of Newton, Iowa, step forth and want to know if H. Rider Haggard did or did not steal a number of lines from a poem called "If I Should Die Tonight," which was written by Miss Dell Smith of Newton in 1873.

Mr. Haggard's verses appear in his novel of "Jess." The two poems were recently published in a Des Moines paper in "deadly-parallel" fashion. All the literary chaps of Iowa are up in arms, ready to fight for the dubious honor of possessing the poem in the archives of their native State, and only too eager, alas! to put the brand of thief and liar upon a man of international fame and spotless reputation.

Prof. Roberts, we are informed, is going to write to Mr. Haggard for an explanation. If Prof. Roberts is wise he will do nothing so rash. Instead, he will communicate at once with a clipping bureau, asking for some "stuff" on Erato. This article from the Rambler's pen will then reach him by return mail, and thus another cyclone will be averted in Iowa.

MEN AND THINGS OVER THE SEAS.

"Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," but when the crown has come to its owner through a bloody deed of murder there is added truth in the proverb. So Peter I, King of Servia, realizes today. He has never succeeded in clearing his name from the suspicion that he was art and part in the tragic doing to death of King Alexander and Queen Draga. The fact that he has retained the military officers who actually committed the crime has strengthened this suspicion, although it may well be that he is really powerless to dismiss them, and remains a puppet in their hands. However having failed to clear his name from association with the murderers, he finds himself absolutely alone in Europe, severely ostracised by every other ruler. Then to his own subjects he has rendered himself distasteful, and a still more bitter object of odium is his son, the Crown Prince, by all accounts a worthless decadent. So there are constant rumors of plots to wipe out the Karageorgievich dynasty, and establish a Servian republic.

The crisis in King Peter's affairs has recently been rendered all the more acute by an economic quarrel between Servia and Austria. Certain blunders in the policy of Austria have resulted in making her pretty well hated in Servia, and revenge has been sought by a proposed tariff union between Bulgaria and Servia, which would have the effect of excluding Austrian commerce from "most favored nation" treatment. In this banding together of the two principalities formerly under the Turkish yoke, and still nominally under Turkish suzerainty, the Sultan also finds cause of quarrel. So King Peter, as regards his immediate neighbors, finds himself pretty well between the devil and the deep sea, and it may be that within a few weeks there will once again be sensational doings in the Balkans.

The Use of Life Belts at Sea.

With the Valencia disaster fresh on public memory along the Pacific Coast, a suggestion made by a correspondent of the London Times is of peculiar appropriateness. It is that passengers undertaking sea voyages should be regularly instructed and drilled in the method of affixing a life belt. The mere suggestion of this necessity conjures up visions of numberless lives lost through just this inability to make use of such provisions for safety as are made on board ship. So great is the sense of security on a modern liner that the average traveler hardly bestows a glance upon the life belt stowed in the rack above his sleeping berth. Perhaps not one man or woman out of a thousand ever thinks of trying it on. But in the moment of supreme danger ignorance of how properly to adjust the belt may mean all the difference between life and death. In a programme of sports at sea, a "life belt race," in which the competitors would make their way to their cabins, don their life belts in the proper manner, and return to the starting point would be not only a new and amusing feature, but would be valuable experience for the competitors and instructive even for the onlookers. There is too much trusting to chance at sea, which accounts for neglected boat drills, life belts never subjected to regular examination, and other omissions which in the long run account for a terrible death total.

Automatic Devices in Germany.

While we have one or two "automatic restaurants" on this side of the Atlantic, the idea has been carried to its furthest extent in Germany. In the best equipped waiter-less restaurants, cabinets with glass fronts line the walls, and through these glass fronts are to be seen rows and rows of little elevators, with the slots and mechanism for working them. All the customer has to do is to drop the required coin in the proper opening, and in due course the hot soup, hot roast beef, cold meat, sandwich, cup of tea or coffee arrives on the elevator from the kitchen in the basement. The entire mechanism works by electricity, and the only attendants in the room are a few boys to remove the empty plates and wipe the tables. Another development of the automatic principle that has come into everyday use in Germany is a "nickel-in-the-slot" machine for polishing boots. After the coin is dropped in, the moving of a lever starts an electric motor. The upper brushes apply the blacking, and then, by pressing the foot lower down, the boot comes into a nest of revolving brushes that quickly brings up the "shine."

A Leviathan Battleship.

While the latest battleship launched in England will be far and away the most powerful gun platform ever devised, there is another very remarkable feature attaching to the vessel. It was on the stocks for only four months, and the entire work of arming, engine-equipping and finishing will be completed within sixteen months from the date of laying the keel. This completely beats all previous records for battleship building throughout the world. The Dreadnought dispenses with all secondary batteries, carrying 12-inch guns exclusively. She has no fewer than ten of these, as compared with the four which up to date the biggest battleships have carried. The idea is that no ship less heavily armed can live within striking distance of her. Her engines being of the turbine pattern, the Dreadnought will also be the swiftest battleship afloat. For the first time in the history of British naval construction the most elaborate precautions are being taken to prevent any knowledge of structural details being acquired by foreign powers. Usually when a war vessel passes into commission the naval experts all over the world knew everything about her. But in this case no gratuitous information has been given away.

IN THE BIG INDUSTRIES.

Manufacture of Automobiles.

The wonderfully rapid growth in the making and sale of automobiles throughout the United States is one of the romances of American enterprise. The invention came from France, and for a time the superiority of structural details remained with the foreign manufacturer. But ere very long all the accumulated knowledge was absorbed by the makers on this side of the Atlantic, and latterly some of the most important improvements have originated here. Now it is universally conceded that the American-made automobile is the one that is best suited to our special requirements and best adapted to our roads, and the inherent good qualities of our types of auto-vehicles are proved by the continuously expanding export trade. Although the industry has been built up in but five or six years' time, there are now no fewer than 70 establishments in the United States engaged in the manufacture of automobiles, with an aggregate capital of more than $20,000,000 and an annual output valued at about $45,000,000.

Benefits Many Industries.

It has to be remembered, too, that this already great industry is even yet only in its infancy. The automobile has now passed the stage of being merely an instrument of pleasure, and its utilization is branching out along many important business lines, calling for the output of motor cars, trucks, livery wagons, patrol wagons, and other diversified forms. Altogether, therefore, the making of automobiles promises to become one of the leading industries of the country. The benefits do not stop here; the effects on many other industries, creating new ones and extending old ones, are quite remarkable. For example, the iron and steel used in the construction of automobiles is entirely special, and does not concern the great mercantile production of the country; a wholly new product has been demanded, and, after some years of importing the required material and parts from abroad, is now being supplied by the home manufacturers.

Opens up New Employment.

Then again an entirely new industry has been created for a special class of skilled mechanics, for the salesmen who attend to the commercial side of the venture, and for the chauffeurs who run the machines. Viewed in this light, it will be seen that the manufacture of automobiles makes its influence felt throughout the length and breadth of the land. Yet another point deserves attention. The bicycle did much for good roads, but the automobile is doing even more. The use of automobiles implies a great distribution of wealth and every up-to-date locality is on the alert to secure its share of the spoil. A great deal has been heard about the abuse of the new type of vehicle—of reckless and quite unjustifiable "scorching" to the annoyance and danger of other forms of traffic. But the facts and figures above cited show how foolish is any general denunciation of automobiles because of the sins of a few of those who use them.

Protection for Zinc Producers.

Up to the present zinc ores have been admitted into the United States either free of duty, or at the low rate of one-and-a-half cents a pound upon such lead as happens to be found in them. Recently, however, owners of zinc mines and smelters of zinc ores, their interests being identical, have been making a joint effort to secure a 20 per cent. ad valorem duty on zinc ores as a protection against competition chiefly from Mexico and British Columbia; and Attorney-General Moody has just rendered a decision advising the Treasury Department that it will be competent so to do, under the existing tariff, by counting that zinc ores fall within the class of "metallic mineral substances." The assessment is now to be made, but a test case will undoubtedly be fought out in the law-courts by the zinc importers whose business will be interfered with by the change.

The advantages from the mining point of view are that, not only will American labor and American capital connected with valuable zinc mines now in operation be protected, but, by assuring domestic producers that the ruinous competition of such countries as Mexico will no longer threaten them. Zinc mining will be stimulated in regions of the United States where hitherto the prospects have been too uncertain to warrant development. There is not the slightest doubt that this country can produce all the zinc ore our industries require and at a reasonable rate. It has to be remembered, too, that Australia, with new methods discovered for treating the vast accumulations of tailings, rich in zinc, of the Broken Hill silver-lead mines, is in the near future going to add immensely to the world's supply of the metal.

The Industrial Boom.

The great increase in the exports and imports of the United States during the year 1905, the combined advance amounting to no less than $318,890,956, is but a reflection of the still greater activity prevailing in the internal commerce of the country. In regard to the latter the same precise figures are not obtainable as in the case of over-sea trade, but the Department of Commerce and Labor reports the year's internal commerce as establishing a high-water record in the history of the country. A bulletin points out that the greatly increased activities in the iron, steel and copper industries were particularly worthy of note, having caused iron production, according to reliable sources of information, to advance 40 per cent. and copper production nearly 15 per cent. over similar production in 1904. As a natural consequence, fuel consumption was greatly augmented, so that the production and movement of both coal and coke were heavily increased. Other movements of important staples, such as grain, live stock and lumber were all largely in excess of the preceding year. Accordingly, all the railways showed marked improvements in their earnings. Thus, when the increased foreign trade is also taken into account, some idea may be obtained of the wide-reaching wave of commercial activity that has spread all over the country.

PEOPLE OF THE COAST.

Ferdinand Hurst has been appointed Supervisor of Shasta county by Gov. Pardee, and last week took the oath of office. He succeeds Grant A. Schroeder.

A. C. True, director of the United States Office of Experimental Stations at Sacramento, is advocating the teaching of the rudiments of agriculture in the primary departments of public schools.

Ex-Senator Watson C. Squire of Washington, who, twenty years ago, was Governor of Washington Territory, returned to his home in Seattle last week after an extended tour of Europe and other Old World countries.

Father Castelli, who was badly burned in the fire which destroyed his residence in Portland last December, is still confined in the hospital there, but takes daily drives in his carriage. A benefit entertainment was given to him last week by members of his parish.

President Benjamin Ide Wheeler of the University of California has been appointed a member of the committee delegated by the Lake Mohawk Conference on International Arbitration to interest the various schools and colleges of the country in that movement.

Prof. Bernard Moses, remembered as the competitor of Benjamin Ide Wheeler for the presidency of the University of California, has announced his intention of taking a year's leave of absence in May, and of visiting various points of historical interest in South America.

W. F. Kyle of Spokane, formerly president of the Spokane-Columbia River Railway and Navigation Company, has sold his interests in that corporation to E. W. Swanson of Seattle, under whose direction the road will be carried on to its originally intended terminus.

W. H. McPhee, formerly of Seattle, has just returned to that city from Alaska, where he reports mining prosperity and enterprise as "amazing." "When I left Sitka," says Mr. McPhee, "it was 64 deg. below zero." He reports that $6,000,000 was taken out of the placer grounds in the vicinity of Fairbanks during the past year.

Judge Willis Brown, editor of the official organ of the National Anti-Cigarette League, for the past five years published at Logansport, Ind., has moved his publication to Salt Lake City, at which place he now presides over the Juvenile Court. The publication is known as "Pluck," and has a wide circulation throughout the country.

H. A. Fairchild of Seattle, chairman of the Washington Railway Commission, is in Walla Walla to investigate the distribution rate question on the complaint of business interests in that section. Before leaving Seattle Mr. Fairchild said: "Unless a definite answer is received from railroads interested in the joint wheat-rate question within the next two weeks, a formal hearing will be called by the State Railway Commission on the petition of millmen and the growers of Eastern Washington." He adds, however, that the growers have every reason to believe that the railways will agree on the joint rate without the formality of a hearing.

PROMINENT. PERSONS.

Roger E. Fry of London, England, is to succeed George H. Storey as curator of paintings in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.

Princess Ena of Battenberg, who is reported to be engaged to the King of Spain, is the only royal child born in Scotland for more than 300 years.

Sir William Garstin, G.C.M.G., is famous as the compiler of the first blue book known in England's government circles. It dealt with his journey to the basin of the upper Nile.

Nathan Wesley Hale, Congressman from Tennessee, can claim descent from Oliver Cromwell, and one of his ancestors served as quartermaster-general under George Washington.

For the first time in its history Yale University will appoint a Japanese to her faculty. He is Dr. Kaniehi A. Sakawa, and he will assume his work some time during the next school year.

Señor Theodoro Desha, the Governor of Vera Cruz, Mex., has donated to the Carnegie Museum at Pittsburgh a Mexican idol which was regarded as the gem of his archaeological collection.

John Temple Graves, editor of the Atlanta (Ga.) News, has begun a movement to celebrate, in his home city, the centenary of the birth of Gen. Robert E. Lee on January 19 next year.

The Duke of Manchester, who married Miss Helena Zimmerman of Cincinnati, has been appointed lord steward of King Edward's household in succession to the Earl of Pembroke. He is the ninth in succession to the title, which was created in 1719.

Mrs. Heyburn, wife of Senator Weldon Brinton Heyburn of Idaho, as Miss Geraldine Yeatman of Philadelphia, was a famous portrait painter. One of the works of her skillful brush is the portrait of Thomas F. Bayard, which adorns the Statehouse in Wilmington, Del. Mrs. Heyburn has recently completed one of the daintiest of miniature plates, which shows the daughter of a friend in various ages from 8 months to 18 years. The heads are miniatures in oil on a Limoges plate, arranged in soft azure clouds all around the edge. There are twelve heads, all finished in exquisite detail.

Queen Margherita of Italy has written a play which is to be produced shortly with Mme. Duse in the leading part. It is understood that the work will deal with certain phases in the life of King Humbert, Margherita's late husband.

Sir Harry Johnston, speaking at a public meeting in London, said he had traveled extensively in Africa for the purpose of putting down the slave trade and that it was his experience that there was more misery and destitution in London than in any one separate part of Africa.

Dr. Walter R. Brinckerhoff, instructor in pathology at the Harvard Medical School, has been offered the position in Hawaii to take charge of the United States leper sanatorium which is to be established there. He graduated in the Harvard Medical School in 1902, and is only 27 years old.

It is about settled that Congressman Timothy D. Sullivan of New York City will, not later than July 1, resign his seat in the House so as to be eligible as a candidate next fall for his old seat in the State Senate. Mr. Sullivan is tired of Washington, and only once this session has been in his seat in the House. That was on the opening day.

Thomas Shaw, the new lord advocate of London, is a self-made man. The son of a baker, he earned his own living as a lawyer's clerk while attending the university. His industry was tremendous, and the soundness of his scholarship may be judged from the fact that he contributed the article on Talleyrand to the Encyclopedia Britannica. He is a notable fly fisher.

After a dinner given in New York last week by Mrs. Styvesant Fish five Southwestern Indians amused the guests in the ballroom, singing songs and showing dances characteristic of their tribe. One of them, a stalwart Moqui named Shungopavi, dressed in full Indian castume, told stories and lilted strange songs of his faraway home. Then the four others, one squaw and three bucks, all gorgeously arrayed, furnished their share of the entertainment.

BITS OF VERSE.

The Seasons.

In the Summer, in the Summer,
When the grass is bright and green,
When the flies who want to enter
Butt their heads against the screen,
When the farmer in the sunshine
Puts in his time in making hay,
And the whole world's hot and dusty,
Then the ice man has his day.

In the Winter, in the Winter,
When the days are short and cold,
When the man who's only forty Feels like sixty, bent and old,
When your feet and hands are frozen
Till you don't know which is which,
When the mercury goes down cellar,
Then the coal man getteth rich.

The Sword of 1812.

It has his name upon it. See, the letters are not clear,
For they are worn and blurred by hands that touched them year by year,
But if we bend and trace them we may then decipher all.
You smile? The quaint old letters spell the name of "Cuthbert Small."

A quaint old man he was—O, this was long, long years ago;
His face was like the faces that the olden pictures show;
A strong and earnest one, with lips that met in sturdy line,
And eyes that sometimes could be stern, but always were benign.

And he was tall and soldierly; at his three score and ten
His step was quick, he set the pace for many younger men;
His hair was white and long, and you would look to see a queue,
And to see ruffles on his shirt and buckle on each shoe.

But this old sword—we gave it him; his country, yours and mine,
And set his name upon it for some sort of grateful sign
That what brave deeds he did for us were cherished at their worth,
That country love and courage were far more than wealth or birth.

And how he used to tell of when the war of '12 was on!
His brave old eyes would glimmer with the fire of days agone;
His old white head would be flung back, his shaking voice was clear,
And those who heard and saw must know to him his land was dear.

Ho, Cuthbert Small, this score of years and more have you been dust,
But this old sword is clean and keen and fair and free from rust—
And all the fine old faith that you and your sword typified
Is living now in every heart that beats with country pride.
—[W. D. N. in Chicago Tribune.

Her Eyes.

Flowers are her garden's eyes;
They watch for her alone
Within whose smile there lies
A beauty like her own;
Their fragrant lids they ope
In haste at morn to see
Her who is all their hope,
So fair is she!

Stars are her heaven's eyes—
They watch her while she sleeps,
Lilies of paradise!
White pearls in azure deeps!
For her their glow and gleam
Throughout the tranquil night,
Bringing the lovely dream
For her delight.

Nor flowers nor stars are eyes
For me, I follow one—
Her lover—shadow-wise,
Companion to the sun!
Her eyes, both flower and star,
In loveliness outshine;
Mirrors of Love they are,
Reflecting mine!

The First Bachelor.

When Adam "batched" in Paradise, before the cook had come,
He found his housework irksome and it was neglected some.
Ad wasn't lazy, either—he was up at early dawn—
But he wouldn't air the bedding and he wouldn't sweep the lawn.
And the serpent heard him muttering, "I won't wear any clo'es Until I find a good fig leaf on which the button grows."
Beneath the couch Edenic was collected such a store
Of miscellaneous rubbish as was never seen before;
While in the primal kitchen was a mess which I declare
Was quite enough itself to make a Christian woman swear.
Then the Lord looked in upon him and He gave an awful groan,
"It is not good, I see," He said, "that man should be alone."
And all terrestrial troubles from that very date began,
For Adam soon thereafter had become a "family man."
He had planted hogs in Eden, sown his "garden sass" and thrived,
But he left the dishes standing till the day that Eve arrived.

WHAT THE GOVERNMENT OF NEW ZEALAND DOES FOR THE PEOPLE.

POSTMASTERS ARE ALL-AROUND PUBLIC SERVANTS—THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE DOES EVERYTHING FOR EVERYBODY—STATE INSURANCE AND OLD-AGE PENSIONS—SIDELIGHTS ON UNIQUE INSTITUTIONS.

By Allen Kelly.

[SPECIAL COMMISSIONER OF THE TIMES.]

Sir J. G. Ward, Minister vor Tourist and Health Resorts, New Zealand Railways and Postmaster-General.

XIII.

THE busiest man in New Zealand is the postmaster. He was hired originally by the government to sell stamps and handle the mails, but as the functions of government have been multiplied, the duties of the postmaster have been extended until he has become a general agent for departments and the people's all-around hired man. One of the commonest objections to extension of governmental management of business affairs is that it involves a great increase in the staff of officials and the increase of a vast army of public employés, which may be used for political purposes and become a menace to the public. New Zealand has shown that extension is not necessarily well- . Instead of hiring new forces and agents to attend to the each new business under- , the government utilizes the who are already in the and conveniently located people.

The interest credited to depositors since the banks were established amounts to about $14,000,000. The cost of management is one-fifth of 1 per cent. of the amount at credit of depositors. In these figures may be found the reason why the banking corporations have opposed—and successfully—the establishment of postal savings banks in the United States. The postal savings bank is one of the "discouragements of capital" so bitterly complained of by critics of the New Zealand system.

GOVERNMENT INSURANCE.

The people of New Zealand, acting through their government organized in 1870 a mutual life insurance company, which has been doing business ever since in competition with all the big insurance companies in the world, and has beaten them in a fair field. The Government Insurance Company has no advantage of special privileges or monopoly. It pays taxes like private companies, and pays for telegrams and postage. It is coöperative, and its function is to provide safe insurance at cheap rates rather than to make great profits. The Government Insurance Company has not accumulated a vast surplus to tempt frenzied financiers and furnish fat pickings for tribes of grafters. There are no McCalls, McCurdys, Alexanders, Hydes or Depews with larcenous paws plunged to the elbows in the pockets of policy holders. The earnings of the people are not spent by degenerates on French banquets, nor given by Pecksniffian philanthropists to political committees and legislative fixers.

The New Zealand Government Life Insurance Company has in force, according to the latest annual report, 43,873 policies, assuring $50,000,000 at death or maturity and $5,000,000 in bonuses. It has paid $13,500,000 in claims and distributed in dividends to policy holders $5,000,000 in cash. Its assets are $18,500,000, its expenses are less than 20 per cent. of the premium income, and its premium rates are lower than those of private companies. Of the total life insurance in force in New Zealand, the government company carries 41 per cent. The average of all insurance is $1000 per policy and $150 for each white inhabitant of New Zealand. The Australian Mutual Provident has 30,773 policies, assuring $40,000,000, and is the only company that comes anywhere near the government in volume of business. The Equitable Society, New York, has 2450 policies in New Zealand, assuring $450,000, and the New York Life has 568 policies assuring $100,000. The American companies have been doing business in the colony for about twenty years.

The law of New Zealand makes an employer liable up to $2000 for death or injury to an employé not attributable to the employé's own serious or wilful misconduct or negligence. For the protection of the employer, and on the principle of distributing loss, the government has added an accident branch to the insurance department, which insures the employer for his liability under the special act and his liability to the extent of $2500 under the common law. The premium paid by the employer for protection is very small, being figured out to cover the cost.

A TRUST PLAYING WITH FIRE.

A year ago the government went into the fire insurance business in order to reduce by competition the exorbitant rates of the insurance combine. The government first reduced rates 10 per cent. The private companies attempted to freeze out the government by the usual trust dodge and reduced rates on dwellings—the "W" class, in underwriters' parlance—one-third, and the government promptly met the cut. Now the underwriters are trying to kill government competition by boycott. If the owner of insured property takes a government policy, the underwriters cancel his insurance. Where the government cannot take risks, the other companies raise their rates. Same old trust game again.

But the government does not attempt to fight the trust with its own weapons at the expense of the public. When it cannot take the whole of a big risk, the government cancels its own business rather than subject the owner of property to the combine's boycott. The underwriters refuse to recognize the government company or reinsure its risks, hoping to kill it in that way, but the government has made reinsurance arrangements with Lloyds in London, and is doing very well. It has saved to the people in one year more than half a million dollars in premiums. The first year of operation has been satisfactory, but the Insurance Department does not consider it a test of the merits of the scheme.

If the combine persists in its obstructive tactics and threatens to cause complete failure of the government's attempt to secure a fair deal for insurers by open competition, something may happen to the fire insurance trust. The underwriters seems to forget that the people of New Zealand are the government and have a way of going directly at the heart of a problem which vexes them. The fire insurance trust is playing with fire.

THE PUBLIC TRUST OFFICE.

In 1872 New Zealand established the Public Trust Office, to serve at cost as executor, administrator, trustee, agent or attorney in the settlement and management of estates and of the property of any persons unable or unwilling to care for it themselves. The Public Trustee draws up wills, deeds and other instruments, takes charge of wills and executes them and does anything and everything that any trustee may do. On funds placed in his hands for investment at discretion, the department pays interest at 4 per cent. The government guarantees against loss by delay in investment, against loss from bad investment, and pays interest promptly and regularly, free of all charges.

Charges for service in the management of property are barely enough to cover actual cost. The Trustee never misuses funds, never speculates, does not die or run away. If he does anything wrong or unwise nobody loses by his acts, for the government is responsible for his conduct and for the property in his hands. Through his agents and the postoffice the Public Trustee is all over the colony and ready for business whenever and wherever his services are needed. The value of estates in the Public Trust Office on March 31, 1905, was nearly $18,000,000, and the capital funds invested amounted to $9,000,000.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Any resident of New Zealand, not an alien, who has reached the age of 65 years; has resided in the colony for twenty-five years; has not been imprisoned for four months during the past twelve years, nor for five years during the prescribed term of residence; has not deserted his wife and children; has lived a sober and reputable life during the past five years; has a yearly income less than $300; is not the owner of property worth $1500; has not deprived himself of property or income to qualify for a pension, is entitled, as a right and not in charity, to a pension of $130 a year, which he can draw in monthly installments through the postoffice. Claims for pensions are granted, after thorough investigation, by magistrates, and the Pension Act is administered by a registrar, who is responsible to the Colonial Treasurer.

On the 31st of March, 1905, there were on the books 11,770 pensioners, 632 of whom were Maoris, drawing a total of $975,000. In 1902 there were nearly 12,000 pensioners drawing more than a million dollars. The number of new grants since 1902 exceeds the number of deaths by 782. The net decrease was due to closer investigation and the elimination of impostors from the rolls. The registrar has recovered more than $25,000 in pensions illegally obtained and has stopped the imposition.

It is estimated that 32,000 persons are eligible by reason of age and residence, but only 35 per cent. are in circumstances which entitle them to pensions. The cost of administration of the Pension Bureau is less than $20,000, or a trifle more than one and a half per cent. of the gross payments. The saving effected in three years by improved methods of administration exceeds the total cost of administration for six years.

At first, old people were inclined to regard the pension as a charity and many were loth to apply for it, but they now regard it as a right, as it is defined in the act—a provision for "deserving persons who during the prime of life have helped to bear the public burdens of the colony by the payment of taxes, and to open up its resources by their labor and skill."

In the examination of applications and in the payment of pensions there is no offensive publicity, and it is impressed upon deputies and clerks that their first duty is to treat pensioners with respectful kindness. The Registrar told me that he had found young men preferable to elderly men as agents and deputies, because young persons are more kindly to the aged and more tolerant of their whims and peculiarities. He had found it necessary to remove old agents who were impatient and discourteous toward applicants.

The only criticism of the old age pension, offered by opponents of everything proposed or done by the Seddon government, is that it discourages thrift and gives the man who spends his earnings as he goes an advantage over the careful, saving man. Critics of that caliber advocate a universal pension, but the Premier will have none of their remedy for the imaginary defect in his plan. He does not hold that it is the highest of moral virtues to scrimp and save all through the best years of life. I think he believes that thrift, like patience, may be carried to the point where it ceases to be a virtue and closely resembles a vice. At any rate he is dead against giving pensions to persons who do not need them; he can see neither equity nor justice in taxing the people to pay needless pensions to rich men. But he does desire to encourage thrift, and to that end proposes an annuity fund, to which any one may contribute according to his ability and circumstances, and which the government will subsidize, administer, invest and disburse.

AN ORDERLY PEOPLE.

New Zealanders, especially the native-born, are peaceable, honest, law-abiding folks. Only 650 policemen are required to keep the entire colony's peace. The criminal statistics show that offenses against the person are rare, being only 644 in the last statistical year. Offenses against property, mostly petty larceny numbered 1767, and all other offenses, including drunkenness and breach of by-laws, 22,354.

During the last year 147,925 prisoners were arraigned in the magistrates' courts of New York City.

In 1903, the Superior Courts of New Zealand tried 380 persons and sent 311 to prison. There were no capital cases. Convictions for drunkenness numbered 8,774, or 10.7 per 1000 of population. More than half the European population over 15 years of age is native born, but the native-born drunkards are only 17 per cent. of the total number. At the end of 1903, there were 688 persons in jail serving sentence.

The police force is a State constabulary; there are no municipal policemen. The men are enrolled and taught their duties at a training depot in Wellington, and then assigned to districts. The recruit must be between 21 and 30 years of age, not less than 5 feet 9 inches in height, with a 38-inch chest, and must pass a fourth standard school examination. A constable's pay begins at 7 shillings, or $1.75 a day, and runs up to $2.25, with an addition of one-sixtieth for every year of service. Sergeants are paid from $2.37 to $3 a day. There is a compulsory pension fund guaranteed by the government, and members of the force must retire at 65 years and may at 60.

The men are on duty eight hours a day, in four-hour watches between 5 a.m. and 9 p.m. and an eight-hour watch at night. Night men carry sticks, but day men carry no weapon, and at no time do the police carry pistols. Auckland, a city of 70,000, is policed by fifty-three men. The suburbs require twenty-eight in addition. The inspector in command of the district, covering half the north island, told me that crimes of violence were very rare, and that the arrests for all causes averaged less than a dozen a day. He told me, and I saw for myself, that the police have no trouble at all with crowds.

NEW ZEALAND VIGILANTES.

And yet, in the land af peace, order and steady habits the Vigilantes are active. I was startled by a headline in an Auckland paper referring to a meeting of the Vigilance Committee, and it called up memories of old days on the Pacific Coast; of the last Vigilance Committee of San Francisco, of which I was a member; of old Virginia City's 601; of the Socorro Stranglers; of the Chowchilla Rangers. The item stated that a meeting of the Taihape Vigilance Committee was held in Mr. Garratt's pharmacy, and that "the matter of stray cattle and horse riders on the footpaths was fully gone into." Nobody was lynched. The chairman explained why the police have been slow in issuing summons to offenders, and the Vigilantes adjourned.

NEW ZEALAND SIDE-LIGHTS.

It is easy to tell a native-born or old-time New Zealander from the recent arrival from England. They are different. The native New Zealander knows something about his country and its laws. The "new chum" is likely to have knowledge in inverse ratio to his readiness to criticise and condemn. I attempted to interview the secretary of an Industrial Association, assuming that he would know something of the practical working of labor legislation from the employer's standpoint. He was obviously an Englishman and "new chum" of the clerk class. He had bulging eyes, which enhanced to grotesqueness the solemnity of his face and manner. He didn't know the first blessed thing about the Arbitration Act or the workings of the court, but supposed that wages, hours of labor, conditions of employment and numbers of apprentices were fixed by direct legislation. He was greatly concerned over the scarcity of boys, and said he was going to have a committee appointed to find out what had become of them. With a look almost of horror on his face, he told me that he couldn't get an office boy, and the iron-founders were unable to find apprentices. It was something for Parliament to inquire into. He would have talked until further orders of that terrible state of affairs if anyone would have listened to the sound of his poor wits scuffing in a fog. As I left he gazed after me with protruding eyes, shook his head ominously and moaned: "Where the boys are is enshrouded in mystery."

It never occurred to the poor man that the absence of children seeking work in a city was an indication of prosperity in the homes, that the boys probably were at school and not looking for jobs 1 nthe offices of secretaries at nothing a week. His manner gave the impression that he suspected King Dick of having eaten all the boys.

FRANCHISE GRAFT.

In Auckland I heard the only definite, specific charge of graft in office that seemed to be worthy of attention. A government official in a position to know something about the practical side of city politics deliberately made the assertion that there had been crooked work in the granting of a franchise to the street railway company and in the letting of paving contracts. He said that a race-track bookmaker managed to get himself elected a member of the City Council, and retired a rich man. As in American cities, behind the graft and responsible for the corruption of public servants, were the public service corporation, seeking special privilege, and the contractor for public work.

A city official corroborated in part the assertion of the government officer, saying that corruption was strongly suspected in a few cases, and that the suspected men had been put out of office and forever retired from public life by the people. Public sentiment, he said, was in a pretty healthy condition, and having had one experience, the people would never again grant a private franchise.

STREET RAILWAYS.

The franchise granted to the street railway promoters runs for thirty-two years, and is now held by a British corporation, believed to be controlled by the American traction combine in which J. P. Morgan is a ruling factor. The city can, and probably will, buy the line at the end of the term at its actual value, paying nothing for "good will." At present the corporation pays to the city in rent and percentage about $20,000 a year, and it pays dividends of 6 per cent. on a capital of $3,000,000.

The line is "jerry-built," and the equipment is the worst in the colony. The cars are marvels of discomfort and inconvenience. In many of them the clear space in the aisles between the ends of seats, which I measured, is less than eleven inches, and through that narrow crevice the conductor must force his way to collect fares. The cars are only seven feet 6 inches wide, and the seats are narrow and crowded so close together that there is no room for a passenger's knees. Official permission to widen the cars is withheld, and the company is prevented from improving its service. The original outfit was thrown together in the cheapest possibly way, because the promoters had no idea it would be such a money maker, and intended to unload it as soon as possible. The "penny section" fare system, however, proved an unexpected success. The penny fare induces travel, and the traffic within the penny sections pays better than the long haul. The volume of traffic is 257 trips per year per head of population. Toronto is three times larger than Auckland, and has fourteen times as many cars, but its tramways run only five times as many car miles a year, and its volume of traffic is only 236 trips per head. The average fare in Toronto is 4 cents; in Auckland a small fraction over 2 cents. Cheap fares increase traffic and profits.

The municipal street railways of Wellington, Christ Church and Dunedin, have been in operation only a few months, and it remains to be seen how the experiment will work out and whether or not public management will be as enterprising as private in extending lines, opening up new sections, building up the suburbs of the cities and thereby solving the rent problem, which has become serious in Wellington.

NEEDS OF THE COUNTRY.

New Zealand wants population to develop her resources. She needs farmers, particularly wide-awake, enterprising, skillful American farmers, who can show her people how to get the most and best out of her soil and climate. She wants producers, not parasites; pioneers, not lawyers, clerks nor seekers of soft jobs, and she offers generous inducements to men who know how to work.

Secretary Tregear, who has done great things in putting men upon the land and clearing the cities of unemployed and street idlers, said to me: "It is a vicious wretch who sends men in black coats to New Zealand. This is no place for them. We are building up a new country, and there is no room here for any but workers. The others are only burdens on society, and they are likely to go hungry."

WHERE SOCIALISM FAILS.

Because New Zealand is a new country, isolated and self-supporting, the people have been able to carry on experiments which might not have been feasible had they been more closely connected with the rest of the world. Closer commercial relations must introduce new factors into the problems of industrial and financial organization, and it remains to be seen how the unique institutions of New Zealand will stand the test of a period of depression.

The New Zealand people have been obliged to do for themselves many things that private enterprise undertakes in other countries, because the inducements to capital to invest in public utilities in a remote island of the South Pacific were either insufficient or unknown to the commercial world.

In Australia, where conditions are more nearly like those existing in older countries, similar experiments have produced totally different results, and government interference in private business and management of public utilities on socialistic lines have been anything but conducive to the public welfare. Study of applied socialism in Australia discredits the theory and confirms disbelief in the efficacy of remedies for the ills of society prescribed by the visionaries and quacks, who assume that a union card is a certificate of statesmanship and the totem a seal attesting God-given wisdom and virtue.

Danderine
GREW THIS HAIR AND WE CAN PROVE IT.

MISS MARMARA HENRY,
5036 Forrestville Ave., CHICAGO.

Miss Henry says: "Before I began using Danderine my hair was falling out in great handsful, and I am pleased to say that Danderine not only stopped it at once, but has made my hair grow more than twice as long as it ever was."

Mrs. Eloise Atherton, Little Rock, Ark., says: "It is surely remarkable the way Danderine improves the hair. It has made my hair grow ten inches longer in five months and it is getting thicker and longer all the time. I believe in giving praise where it is due, and you can use my name as reference if you so desire."

FLORENCE RUSSELL,
Age 6 years,
315 Mohawk Street, CHICAGO.

Since it has become generally known that Danderine causes hair to grow just as abundantly on the heads of children as it does on those of matured persons, many truly marvelous cases are coming to our notice. Little Miss Russell, whose photograph appears above, is certainly one of the remarkable ones. Her beautiful hair is over thirty inches long and her mother says that "DANDERINE GREW EVERY BIT OF IT."

MISS SELMA HASSELL,
3738 North 43d Court, CHICAGO.

Miss Hassel says: "My hair would not reach below my waist when I began using your Danderine. It was also faded and splitting at the ends. Now it is over 3½ feet longer than it ever was and it has regained its original rich blond color. I used the tonic about four months all together."

DANDERINE is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating, fertilizing and life-producing properties cause the hair to grow abundantly long, strong and beautiful. IT IS THE NATURAL FOOD OF THE HAIR, SCIENTIFICALLY CHARGED WITH NEW AND GENUINE LIFE-PRODUCING ESSENCES UNHEARD OF BY OTHER MAKERS OF HAIR TONIC. NOW at all druggists in three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle.

NEW BOOKS REVIEWED.

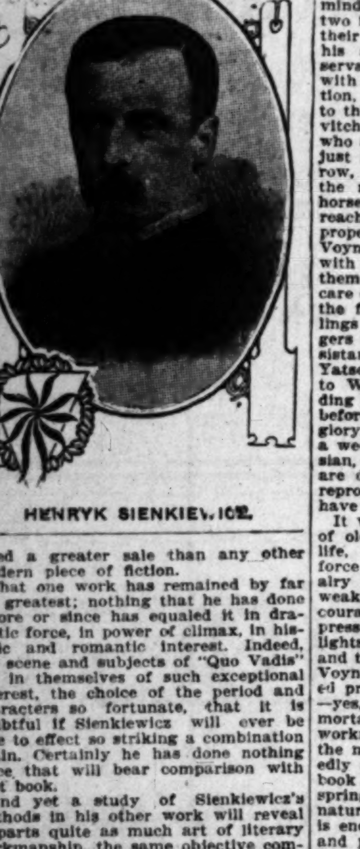
[BY A TIMES REVIEWER.]

FICTION.

By Sienkiewicz.

IN THE FIELD OF GLORY. By Henryk Sienkiewicz. Translated by Jeremiah Curtin. Little, Brown & Co., Boston. (Price $1.50.)

Among the spots in California that shall serve as goals of pilgrimage in time to come is that ranch where a little band of Polish patriots once attempted to found an ideal colony; and one of the names that shall make that spot even much more famous than it is today is that of Henryk Sienkiewicz. How many remember that he once trod these shores? California in those days took little note of his coming or going; today out of all living authors he has been chosen as the recipient of the Nobel Literary prize, and the people have crowned his work with as high an honor, for one of his books has registered a greater sale than any other modern piece of fiction.



HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ.

That one work has remained by far his greatest; nothing that he has done before or since has equaled it in dramatic force, in power of climax, in historic and romantic interest. Indeed, the scene and subjects of "Quo Vadis" are in themselves of such exceptional interest, the choice of the period and characters so fortunate, that it is doubtful if Sienkiewicz will ever be able to effect so striking a combination again. Certainly he has done nothing since that will bear comparison with that book.

And yet a study of Sienkiewicz's methods in his other work will reveal in parts quite as much art of literary workmanship, the same objective comprehension of a great variety of human types and power of their depiction with a few bold lines; the same dramatic method and ability to project himself into the thought of other times as well as into varied types of men; the same delicate satire that is without bitterness.

In his new novel, indeed, this satire is at its best, and in the service of character study gives us some of his most delightful humor. "In the Field of Glory" is a romance of Polish history, and the scene is laid in the reign of King John Sobieski just before the Turkish invasion of 1682-1683. The story opens with the winter night journey along forest roads, of Pan Gideon Pangovski, his relative, Pani Vinnitski, and his ward, Panna Anulka Sieninski. The carriage in which the three travel meets with a huge pack of wolves, surrounding a herd of boars, and the travelers are in great danger, when a small whirlwind of hunters rush past, scattering both wolves and boars, and pursuing them with shouts and laughter. The rescuers prove to be the four brothers Bukoyemski, and their friend Stanislav Tsyprianovitch, who are amusing themselves by nightly hunts of this sort, anticipating danger to travelers on account of the exceptional cold of the season. The four Bukoyemskis, splendid, big, simple-hearted, careless, courageous men, who laugh as loudly as their horses neigh, drink correspondingly deeply of mead and vodka, love each other loyally and quarrel most seriously over the smallest things, are in themselves natural and amusing enough to make the story worth while. The whole party takes refuge for the night with the father of Stanislav, Pan Serafin Tsyprianovitch, who lives near, the Bukoyemskis promptly fall in love with Anulka, and, after the evening's drinking, fall to quarreling so fiercely as to the right of precedence in aspiring to her hand that they finally consign her to the devil as a cause of their disagreement and later conclude that Stanislav must take her. This scene where the brothers come nearly to blows, then repent and fall on one another's necks, each first urging the gift of the girl on the other, then demanding that Stanislav shall marry her out of hand to get her out of the way, is one of the most amusing things in the book—indeed, one of the most amusing things in recent literature. At the suggestion of Stanislav that the girl herself and her guardian might have something to say in the matter, the brothers turn their anger against Pan Gideon, and are considering the advisability of challenging him to sabers for imagined objections to the match, when they are persuaded to adjourn the quarrel to the morning. The next day the five still escort the carriage of Pan Gideon on its way, and at a forest inn they find a neighbor and old acquaintance of Anulka, Yatsek Tachevski, who was also attacked, the previous night, by wolves, and passed a night in a tree to escape them. The Bukoyemskis perceive in Yatsek a new rival for the love of Anulka, and are for challenging him, but their hot-headed attempt at a quarrel, which greatly puzzles the object of it, is interrupted by Pan Gideon, who commands peace. The brothers are not to be robbed of their duel, however, and at last Yatsek comprehends and accommodates them when they reach the next town; fighting all four of them, one after the other, and Stanislav in addition, wounding the four and coming off even with Stanislav, by reason of greater skill in sword play. Whereupon all six become the best of friends. All go to the house of Yatsek, where their wounds are dressed by Father Voynovski, who, in his piety, goodness, and hot-headed humanness, is, next the Bukoyemskis, the most delightful personage of the story. Now it happens that a relative of Pan Gideon has just suggested to him that, as Panna Anulka is poor and the property that he himself owns is from his wife, and will be striven for by her relatives at his death, he can confer a benefit on Panna Anulka by marrying her; and this idea fits so well with Pan Gideon's inclination that he determines to act on the advice. Accordingly he picks a quarrel with Yatsek for duelling with the Bukoyemskis, refusing to listen to the explanation of the brothers that they were the challengers; and Yatsek enlisting for the war with the Turks, he sends him a gift of a horse and a ducat, with such an insulting letter for the young man's poverty that Yatsek is cut to the heart—the more so as he thinks that Anulka had to do with the writing of the letter. Anulka, indeed, under the influence of Pan Gideon's misrepresentations concerning the duels, treats Yatsek so coldly that he goes off to the war in despair. The Bukoyemskis, who strongly resent the manner with which she has dismissed their friend, give her to understand that there may be an affair between Yatsek and the daughter of the commander under whom he is to serve. Therefore, when Pan Gideon proposes marriage to her, and the father confessor of her guardian counsels her to accept as a duty of gratitude and for the sake of her own future, she does so. In the midst of the betrothal ceremonies, however, Pan Gideon is seized with an attack of fainting, and dies without recovering consciousness.

At once the Zepretskis, nearest relatives of Pan Gideon's wife, take possession of the house, and the son, Martsian Krepetski, a horrible degenerate whom Pan Gideon during his life drove from the house for making "goat's eyes" at Anulka, plans to possess Anulka in marriage if the girl prove to be heir to the property, by will, by force if there is no will. His father opposes his proposal of violence, but only feebly, and leaves him in charge of the house, with his two evil-minded and malicious sisters. These two insult Anulka after the manner of their kind, and Martsian, repulsed in his advances, beats her. A faithful servant of the house plies Martsian with liquor till he is dead to all sensation, and carries Anulka off in a wagon to the home of Pan Serafin Tsyprianovitch. At this time the Bukoyemskis, who started for Warsaw to enlist, have just returned in great shame and sorrow, having drunk too much wine on the road and gambled away their horses. Realizing that they will never reach the city safely with any kind of property in their possession, Father Voynovski and Pan Serafin plan to go with them, both determining to enlist themselves, and to put Anulka in the care of the Queen. On the road through the forest they are attacked by hirelings of Martsian Krepetski, and strangers who are passing come to their assistance. The strangers turn out to be Yatsek and Stanislav, and all go on to Warsaw together, where the wedding of Yatsek and Anulka takes place before his departure for the field of glory. The Bukoyemskis make Yatsek a wedding present of the ear of Martsian, somewhat the worse for age, and are deeply hurt and indignant at the reproof of Father Voynovski. They have had cut it off in a duel.

It will be seen that this is a picture of old Poland—its rough simplicity of life, its primitive justice, the native force of the men, their natural chivalry and loyalty, their very human weaknesses and their honesty and courage under it all. The picture impresses one with its probability and delights one with its freshness, its humor, and the charm of its finer lines—Father Voynovski, the simple, pious, hot-headed priest, Anulka, Yatsek, Pan Serafin—yes, and the Bukoyemskis, the immortal Bukoyemskis. The literary workmanship of the book delights one the more and more closely and repeatedly one reads it. The humor of the book alone—of that rare type that springs from a simple appreciation of natural effects without exaggeration, is enough to stamp the story as great and place it in the rank of the very few.

Henry Wallace Phillips.

MR. SCRAGGS. By Henry Wallace Phillips. The Grafton Press. New York. (Price $1.25.)

The present time is remarkable for its production of excellent humorous literature. The United States has several humorists of first rank, and among them none is a greater favorite than Henry Wallace Phillips. Mr. Phillips has not yet found any hero to rival "Red Saunders," and there is no doubt that the popularity of that character quite apart from the intrinsic merit of Mr. Phillips's work has much to do with the sale of his earlier stories. Mr. Scraggs, middle-aged, ugly, mournful in appearance, cannot possibly compete with light-hearted Irish "Red" for popular favor, yet there is no doubt that some of the stories Mr. Phillips puts into his mouth are quite as good as any told by the earlier hero; if we except the cat and dog story and "A Red-haired Cupid;" indeed, there are one or two of the Scraggs stories that will almost if not quite rival these. "The Fountain of Youth," for instance, is good, and "St. Nicholas Scraggs" is better. This last story relates how Scraggs, on the 24th of December, having parted from all other wealth in various ways, staked a gold collar button on a game of chance, and won and continued winning until he broke the bank; how he then divided his winnings, sent half home to the numerous Mrs. Scraggs (he was a Mormon,) and with the rest set out to see the world a little; how he brought up, owing to his own condition after conviviality, and through a little joke of a railway ticket agent, in a Presbyterian, vegetarian, prohibition colony, where Christmas was a solemn occasion; and how he ordered a carload of toys and compelled the colonists to celebrate with a Christmas tree, himself taking the church platform as St. Nicholas, rigged out in cotton whiskers and two business-like revolvers.

Mr. Phillips's humor consists in an appreciation of odd types of characters and situations, remarkable inventive genius for these, and graphic use of American colloquial English. The pith of his art is terseness. The English joker generaly blazes a broad trail to the point of his story, and frequently explains the point, after he reaches it, for fear you may miss it; this is not the method of all English humor, but it is that of much of it. American humor, on the contrary, is crass, and Mr. Phillips is a typical representative of its method; he gives you the point, and an entire picture in a half-dozen words, and the unexpectedness of his climax is its charm. Here is a typical paragraph, for instance, which offers a picture of events most writers would take pages in relating.

"'There's something about Christmas (says Scraggs) that warms the heart and makes the noblest and best of our sentiments to come to the surface for a breath of fresh air. Yes, sir, there is, and they passed it around in Peg'leg's place that afternoon, so hot, sweet and plentiful that I hadn't been there more'n two hours before my feelin's had rose to such a pitch that I went out and bought each and every Mrs. Scraggs a pair of number ten rubber boots, a pound of raisins, and an accordion. The boots was useful; the raisins, of course, stood for Christmas cheer; but what in thunder I bought the accordions for I never knew afterward. I'd give a ten-dollar bill this minute to know. It was a tremenjus idee at the time, but that's all I recall of it. I sent the hull shootin' match around to the house by a small boy with a hand sleigh, and a card saying, "Peace on Earth" on top of it.'"

"Then come to us the queerest thing in that whole curiosity shop of a ranch. Its name was Alexander Fulton. I reckon Aleck was about twenty-two by the calendar almanac, and anywheres from three to ninety by the way you figure a man. Aleck stood six foot high as he stood, but if you ran the tape along his curves, he was about six foot four.

"He weighed one hundred and twenty pounds, of which twenty-five went to head and fifty to feet. Feet! You never saw such feet. They were the grandest feet that ever wore a man; long and high and wide, and all that feet should be. Chawley said that Alexander had ground plan enough for a company of nigger soldiers. And hung to Aleck's running gear, they reminded you of the swinging jigger in a clock. When Aleck laid a flipper on a cayuse's back, you'd think the critter was blanketed. And then there was his Adam's apple—he had so many special features, it's hard to keep track of them. About a foot of Aleck's protrudin' into air was due to neck. In the center of that neck was an Adam's apple that any man might be proud of.

"His complexion consisted of freckles; when you spoke to him sudden he blushed, and then he looked for all the world like a stormy sunset. His eyes were white and so was his hair."

Mr. Phillips's heroes are thoroughly manly, despite their weaknesses—as manly as Bret Harte's heroes, and much more plausible. "Mr. Scraggs" may be recommended as an effective antidote to melancholia and cynicism, and for a tonic the whole mental and moral system.

Crockett at His Best.

THE CHERRY RIBBAND. By S. R. Crockett. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

A most charming story fascinatingly told is Crockett's "The Cherry Ribband." The scene is, of course, Scotland. The hero is of the outlawed Covenanters, the heroine a-laughing, singing, tantalizing gypsy, the daughter of Cornet Grahame, motherless and reared in camps, her father's comrade on all excursions, without knowledge of religion or of the ordinary thoughts and occupations of women. To those of Raith Ellison's religion Ivie Rysland is the scarlet woman, Jezebel, yet for Raith she possesses a strange attraction. She has a fashion of meeting him in the wood on his way home from the Conventicle, to mock and laugh at his sober countenance and serious ways. One day, meeting him thus, she lets fall at his feet, in vanishing, a bracelet of broom blossoms tied with a cherry ribband; and this is his undoing. For, carried home in his bosom, it falls thence during prayers, to the hearth spied by his brother Beattie, who hates him for his superior gifts, who has watched the meetings in the wood and now points out the telltale ornament of the girl. Raith's father casts him off in disgrace and drives him from his door. By good fortune, as he walks through the forest, he meets with the troopers under Grahame and witnesses a duel in which Grahame kills a man for light speech about his daughter. He is adopted into the troop and thereafter is consoled for all misfortune by daily sight and speech of Ivie. In course of time, bitterness comes to him through the arrest of the hill preacher, Peden, who is concealed in his father's house, and of his father's family with the preacher. Ivie, changed and sobered by association with Raith, carrying food to the prisoners for his sake, is reproved for her Godless condition by Peden. Later blown by a tornado from a high cliff into the sea, where she is rescued by a Covenanter of the Ellison's congregation, takes advantages of the belief in her death and goes to live quietly with Raith's mother, to learn of her the household ways of women and of Raith's religion. A plot of Beattie's against Grahame and his brother Raith, brings about the accusation of Grahame before a tribunal and his temporary disgrace, and, while Grahame is absent on this business, an insurrection of the prisoners takes place. After many adventures, the lovers are reunited and the family of Raith reconciled to his marriage to Ivie.

The contrast of types, the naturalness of these in their different ways, the freshness of the story as a story, and the grace of its telling, make this book one of the best published within the last twelvemonth.

Randall Parrish.

A SWORD OF THE FRONTIER. By Randall Parrish. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. (Price $1.50.)

This is romance of the time of Pontiac's famous conspiracy—the adventures of the Chevalier De Coubert on a journey across the wilderness from Fort Chartres to the camp of Pontiac—during which journey he meets with many adventures, and rescues, with the aid of a faithful servitor and comrade, two lovely women. The adventures of the book strike one as in parts somewhat forced, but taken as a whole the romance is, of its kind, fairly good work and of average interest; it can hardly be classed higher than this among the mass of really good romances that are now being turned out.

An English Story.

WILD WHEAT. By M. E. Francis (Mrs. Francis Blundell.) Longmans, Green & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

In contrast to the above romance fiction comes a piece of English realism—the story of a younger brother who quarrels with the elder and heir, and, reproved as if he were an underling, for interference with affairs of the estate, leaves home and follows the challenging command of a girl to hire out as underkeeper on the estate of her aunt. For all his sacrifice the girl proves beyond his attainment, as she is in love with another man and moreover far too thoroughly an aristocrat to marry a man who has played the part of a servant in her aunt's employ. In his despondency the man permits himself to be led by a scheming mother into a marriage with the daughter of the keeper. He meets by chance with the man about whom the dainty little lady of his first love is eating out her heart, and is the means of so bringing the two together so that a match is made. He himself is at first most unhappy in his married life, despite the worshiping devotion of his wife; but her peril at the birth of their child reveals to him that he has come to love her. The death of his brother leaves him the heir to the family estate, and grief and interest in his child brings his mother to him in reconciliation.

The book is good work and a story of fair interest.

TEXT-BOOKS.

English.

A PRIMER OF ESSENTIALS IN GRAMMAR AND RHETORIC. By Marietta Knight, English Department, South High School, Worcester, Mass. American Book Company, New York. (Price 25 cents.)

English grammar is comparatively simple if studied on an independent plan. For a long time it was rendered ponderous and incomprehensible by an imitation of the intricate Latin grammar—an imitation wholly unwarranted by our declensional and syntactical forms. With the passage of time a greater and greater simplification of the grammar has come about through the intervention of common sense and modern methods. Nevertheless, a combined grammar and rhetoric of no more than sixty duodecimo pages would impress one in advance as necessarily extremely superficial. It is, indeed, according to title, but a primer of grammar and rhetoric—and yet it contains amazingly much for so small a book. It is intended simply as a guide in review and drill work from other textbooks used in secondary schools; yet so simple, clear and concise is it that it may be commended to any who wish to correct weaknesses in their use of English and have not much time to give to study. Teachers will surely find it a desirable aid.

Literary Studies.

SHAKESPEARE'S "JULIUS CAESAR." Edited by Hamilton Wright Mable. Gateway Series; Van Dyke. American Book Company, New York.

This volume, belonging to the Gateway Series, under the general editorship of Prof. Henry Van Dyke, aims to make the texts studied clear and interesting to students preparing for college; hence notes and introductions are simple and of a character suited to the needs of the high school rather than of independent adult students. This fact is impressed upon one in looking over Mr. Mabie's work on "Julius Caesar;" both notes and biographical introduction are very evidently intended for young readers of Shakespeare and differ essentially from those of other editions in this regard—from the texts of William Rolfe, for instance, which are Catholic in character. It would perhaps be too severe a criticism to accuse Mr. Mabie of going to an extreme in this regard and rendering his notes too juvenile; but it is certain that high school students of somewhat more than average ability are likely to find Mr. Rolfe's notes not too difficult and more to their taste. Possibly for average classes such a text as Mr. Mabie's is best.

CARPENTER'S GEOGRAPHICAL READER. AFRICA. By Frank G. Carpenter. American Book Company, New York.

The geographical readers of Frank G. Carpenter are becoming well known and widely used. They are the result of personal observation, are written from the point of view of the all-round newspaper man, who lets little escape him in a practical "write-up," and give a very clear idea of places, their reason, present character and promise of development, their place in the world's industry and commerce. The text-book on Africa is clearly and simply written, illustrated with maps and from photographs. It is suited to the middle grades of the grammar school.

DUTTON'S WORLD AT WORK SERIES. Edited by Samuel T. Dutton, Teachers' College, Columbia University. American Book Company, New York. (Price 30 cents.)

FISHING AND HUNTING. By Sarah M. Mott, teacher in the Ethical Culture School, New York City, and Maude Barrows Dutton. (Price 30 cents.)

IN FIELD AND PASTURE. By Maude Barrows Dutton. World at Work Series. American Book Company, New York. (Price 35 cents.)

It is intended that this series shall describe the activities of the race through the several stages of culture from barbarism to civilization. At the same time it will devote its attention entirely to present day peoples living in widely separated parts of the world and typifying these various developments. The stories in the first volume, intended for second year pupils, relate to child life among the Eskimos, the Western Indians, the Filipinos, and the Alaskan Indians, bringing out in an entertaining manner many of the habits and customs of these primitive peoples, and their particular industries. The hand work given at the end of the book is an important feature.

The stories in the second book, for third year reading, are about the Pueblo Indians, the Egyptians, the Navajo Indians, the Tibetans, the Cubans, the Norwegians, and the Swiss—peoples more advanced than those treated in the first volume. The tilling of the soil and the domestication of animals mark a higher stage of progress. In this way the young child perceives that the complex civilization of today has grown up from simple elementary beginnings. The hand work suggested is as interesting as it is educational. Both books are profusely and attractively illustrated from photographs.

Commercial Correspondence.

COMMERCIAL CORRESPONDENCE. By Albert G. Belding, High School of Commerce, New York City. American Book Company, New York.

A large number of business men could learn a great deal from this little modern text-book on correspondence, and the average man or woman can but have his or her ideas on the subject of letter writing and the handling of matter for the post enlarged and improved by it. The book deals with letters ordering goods, letters of application, of introduction and recommendation, form letters, telegrams, letters containing inclosures, bills, etc., with forms of courtesy used in letter writing; with the use of letter files and other modern appliances and methods used in the handling of correspondence; with the contract relation of correspondents according to law, etc. The book contains 150 pages, is indexed and arranged with exercises and review questions.

Pedagogy.

GREAT PEDAGOGICAL ESSAYS. By F. V. M. Painter, A.M., D.D., Professor of Modern Languages in Roanoke College. American Book Company, New York.

This is not a digest of theory, but rather a compilation of extracts, designed to make the student of pedagogy acquainted with style and typical theories of authorities, from Plato to Herbert Spencer. Authors quoted are Plato, Aristotle, Xenophon, Cicero, Seneca, Quintilian, Plutarch, Jerome, Rhabanus Maurus, Martin Luther, Montaigne, Roger Ascham, John Milton, John Amos Comenius, John Locke, Fenelon, Charles Rollin, Jean Jacques Rousseau, Immanuel Kant, John Henry Pestalozzi, Frederick Froebel, Horace Mann and Herbert Spencer; and besides, there are extracts from the Apostolical Constitutions and the "Ratio Studiorum" of the Jesuits. Biographical and historical sketches precede the selections. To the outsider these would appear but crumbs from the great works, useful for reference in regard to style, but too incomplete for other use, except in regions remote from large libraries.

NEW MAGAZINES.

The Pneus is a small magazine devoted to automobile matter of a lively character—stories, poems, jokes—and published at Chicopee Falls, Mass.

The Cornubian Annual is an English magazine published in Holborn, London.

The Science Department of St. Nicholas contains much that older people may read with profit. The illustrations in the February number showing the evolution of the horse's hoof are excellent.

Suburban Life, published at Boston, is running a series of articles on poultry raising. The February number has also an article on the use of the incubator. "How to Identify the Evergreens," by Prof. Samuel T. Maynard; "Greenhouse Work as a Profession," by W. N. Craig, and "Mission Furniture Modernized," by Arthur P. Snow, are other articles in the February number illustrative of the varied character of this periodical.

The Scrip is a new, small, but most promising art monthly issued by Moffatt, Yard & Co., New York. The February number has some excellent articles on mural decoration, with a few admirable illustrations of John la Farge's decorations, an article on "General Culture in Art," by William B. Van Ingen, an article on "The Significance of the Photo-Mechanical Processes," by Frank Weitenkampf, a department on "The Galleries" and an "Arts and Crafts" department.

"Progress of American Playwrights," by Montrose J. Moses, in the February Success, is an interesting summing up of conditions of the stage in this country; and "Henry Irving's Fight for Fame,' by Bram Stoker, in the same number, furnishes what might be termed a companion piece. "Princely Storekeeping as a Trade Magnet," by Henry Harrison Lewis, indicates one of the signs of the times. Thomas H. Tibbles contributes some "Personal Recollections of Abraham Lincoln."

Concerning the United States Senate, William Everett has some pungent things to say in the February Atlantic. Particularly suggestive is his speculation as to what might have been. "I have often speculated," says Mr. Everett, "on what would have happened if the awful blow that put President Roosevelt in his present position had not fallen, and he had remained somewhat longer in the chair of the Senate. I think his indomitable longing for efficacy and dislike of humbug would have led him to assert his rights as presiding officer in some extremely emphatic way—to the great benefit of business."

PEOPLE AND THINGS LITERARY.

The popularity of American fiction in Australia is undoubtedly on the increase. An English periodical, indeed, has calculated that at least three-fourths of the Canadian editions of popular novels are imported from America, and only one-fourth from England.

It is nearly four years since Frederick Upham Adams began work on "The Bottom of the Well,' which will appear in May from the press of the G. W. Dillingham Company. His successful golf novel, "John Henry Smith," was written in six weeks. The scenes of the new book are Jamaica, England and New York City, and the time is the approximate present.

A work entitled "Evolution the Master-Key," written by Dr. C. W. Saleeby, is issued by the Harpers. Dr. Saleeby is well known on both sides of the Atlantic for his able articles in Harper's Magazine and The Academy. His new volume reviews the progress of the doctrine of evolution since it was first postulated by Herbert Spencer in his "First Principles," over forty years ago; and shows how all the discoveries of the twentieth century, especially that of radium, only make possible to a greater extent the demonstration of this fundamental law. The volume represents the latest word on a subject of vital interest, and will doubtless excite even more comment than did his "Cycle of Life," published two years ago.

Owing to the necessity for most careful comparison and collation of the new translation of Champlain's Voyages which Prof. and Mrs. E. G. Bourne are preparing for "The Trail-makers," the library of history and exploration of which Prof. J. B. McMaster is consulting editor, the publishers, A. S. Barnes & Co., will delay publication of this work for a few weeks. While Champlain's first volumes have been translated in limited editions privately issued, his last and largest volume which contains practically a summary of his discoveries in the New World has not been translated before.

British and American physicians have recently been having a very pretty dispute over the value of Mark Twain's books in their profession. According to the British Medical Journal, "Convalescents must not read Mark Twain's books. They not only cheer but inebriate. Twain's books may provoke side-splitting laughter and so retard the union of severed or lacerated parts in the healing process." In reply to this Dr. C. W. Brandenburg of the New York Medical College, declares he has prescribed Mark Twain for his patients as regularly as he has accepted the food diet. "Laughter is one of the best, most natural forms of exercise I know of,' said Dr. Brandenburg. "The idea that side-splitting laughter may retard the healing of wounds, is, I am afraid, a trifle far-fetched. I really think that granulation might be gently stimulated instead. Of course, people have burst their hearts by laughing, but the instances were most exceptional. I find that the monotony of convalescence is greatly relieved by the stimulus of Mark Twan's books. When I was a student in Cincinnati, perhaps thirty years ago, the new Governor of Oho, John M. Pattison, was my room-mate. He was studying law, I medicine. He was blue and ill one night, and I read 'Tom Sawyer' to him. He laughed himself well."

WHY JAPAN ENDED WAR.

Ready and Glad to Quit After the Surrender of Port Arthur.

[San Francisco Argonaut:] Frederick Palmer, the noted war correspondent, has a remarkable article in Collier's Weekly, entitled "Why Japan Was Ready to Quit: An Inside Story that Could Not be Published Until the Peace Treaty Was Signed." Boiled down to the bare bones of it, this is what Palmer says: That the little group of statesmen who directed their country's policy in this war went into it with the knowledge that Japan could win initial victories, but with the knowledge that she could not strike huge Russia a vital blow; that the public opinion of the world was carefully directed from Tokio, and so successfully that Japan was quite early believed by financiers to be invincible, and loans were made at reasonable interest rates; that, after the fall of Port Arthur Japan was ready to make peace, but did not dare to say so because of its effect in encouraging Russia; that Oyama's reports of Russian losses and prisoners in the battle of Mukden were deliberately falsified, and so cleverly was the whole campaign of publicity managed from Tokio that the world believed Oyama's falsehoods and disbelieved Linevitch's statements of fact; that, after the battle of Mukden the correspondents assembled at Tokio were encouraged by the government to believe that Oyama was pressing Linevitch, while really nothing of the sort was occurring; that correspondents at the front read week after week in American papers a month old statements that Linevitch was "already enveloped by a great flanking movement," and "great war news is hourly expected," while as a matter of fact, the Japanese army was leading a barrack-room life, and making no attempts to advance on Linevitch; that, in the year that elapsed after the battle of Liao Yang, Oyama advanced only twelve miles a month, or one hundred and twenty miles in all, and that, finally, Japan knew she could not win the next great land battle, Mukden itself being, in Mr. Palmer's opinion, "no more decisive than Antietam." Mr. Palmer's conclusion i sthis: "To the world Japan seemed in the position of the victor and Russia of the vanquished. The situation was really stalemate." Japan won this war by her ability to keep her secrets and to influence the world in her favor by misrepresentation of facts, by colossal bluffing.

"None is" or "None Are."?

All the friends of liberty of speech owe gratitude to Prof. Lounsbury of Yale for his defense in Harper's Magazine of the use of "none" as the subject of a plural verb. What idiot precisionist it was that started the movement to schoolmaster that use of "none" out of existence we do not know, but his effort has had a deplorable degree of success. An awful example ought to be made of some of the grammarians who try to make language conform to rules instead of making rules conform to language. It will take years to untwist the tongues of worthy people who have compelled themselves to say "none is" when their congenital impulse was to say "none are."—[Harper's Weekly.

Public Opinion Governs Us.

THE REAL POWER BEHIND THEODORE ROOSEVELT—WHY HE SEEMS TO MAKE "OUR" GOVERNMENT REPRESENT US.

By Lincoln Steffens.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—Public opinion, apparently, is the dominant power here at present. There is no boss of the United States. Cities are bossed and counties and States; there is a boss of the House of Representatives and there are bosses in the United States Senate. The boss has climbed high on his way to the top and the late Marcus A. Hanna came pretty near reaching it, but he didn't; not quite. No one man ever has reigned over the whole national government in the sense that George Cox, for example, lorded it over Cincinnati; not yet. The friends of the Senate pretend to fear lest the President may, and we saw last week that he does practice some of the methods of a rather masterful politician. Also we noticed, however, that the dread of Roosevelt arose from the suspicion that he represented us. And hence his power.

The President may not realize it; he may think he wins because he plays the game well and he may think he has to play on with the machine to make his victory complete. But he doesn't. The longer I stay here the surer I am that, much as they prize his patronage and dearly as they love his Presidential powers, our representatives in Congress would sacrifice his favor, defy his discipline, and, possibly, defeat his policy, if they did not regard him as the leader of public opinion. A city of intrigue, official Washington follows the President to fool him—or us.

And their cry that he is a boss is an attempt to fool us. The President is no boss. A boss doesn't work with, he works against or around the public will. The test question for a boss, as for a representative, is, "What does he represent?" And the boss represents business, bad business, any business that will contribute funds to pay him to corrupt men and make "our" government favor the few who want to get things out of the rest of us. That is the system; that is the great American system of so-called "political corruption" which disgraces our cities, humiliates our States and loots our insurance companies, etc. And without a system, there can be no boss.

There can be a system without a boss, however, and, as in New Jersey and Illinois, in Ohio and Connecticut and Massachusetts, where also no man is called "the" boss, there is a system in Washington. It is too soon to trace its outlines, but the signs of it appear on every hand; from the clouds of unnecessary servants (known as "chairwarmers") swarming in the public building up through the House combine to the scandal-scarred captains of industry in the Senate.

There is no doubt about the system being here. The only question is as to its power, and the best way to measure that is to fight it as they are doing in Jersey and Ohio and Wisconsin. But the President has elected to get along with it as far as he can; it is the political organization of the system that he is using to jam through his bills against the system. He is succeeding, too, apparently; the House combine is doing things for us. But you can see the marks of the system on all the things it has done for us.

Take the Philippine Tariff Bill. That isn't exactly for us. Secretary Taft got the President to recommend it as a measure of justice to the Filipinos. His idea was to remove the tariff on Philippine products shipped into the United States and give the islands a chance by putting them on a par with our Territories. The tariff bill is ours only in that it represents our sense of honor and fair dealings. But it is against the interest of certain businesses which produce things the Philippines produce. Now the system represents, not honor and fair dealings, but business; not the people, not men and women, not "folks" as Representative Adam Bede puts it; the system represents business interests. So there was great opposition to the Philippine Tariff Bill, and in the committee, before it was reported out to the House, two interests were "taken care of" in the bill. A tariff was to be kept on sugar and on tobacco till 1909. These interests were so strongly represented that there was no use trying to put "our" bill through "our" House without them. And even with them, we couldn't quite make it. The President and the Speaker had to allow one more interest to be taken care of. Rice also was excepted. That won over to our side the "Democratic" Representative of Rice, and thus this bill against "business interests" was passed with three long catlike scratches of the clinging system in it.

Take the Presidents' second recommendation, to admit four Territories as two States. There is no objection to the wedding of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, except from some of the Indians, and Indians don't count; at least they have never counted. To the union of Arizona and New Mexico the opposition is so bitter that it is almost impossible to get the truth about it here in Washington. All that's certain is that somebody (not a reporter this time) is lying dreadfully, and that the big special interests in those Territories are against the bill. This is enough for our present purpose. The opposition had a majority of "our" House; enough of our Representatives to beat the bill signed a paper promising to vote "no." Yet a majority voted "yes," and the bill was passed. Thus "our" President beat the system again with the system's own political organization in "our" House.

But look at the victory and see what it cost. How was it won? The understanding here is that a hint was dropped as from the Speaker to the effect that if our Representatives were "good" on the Statehood and Philippine tariff bills, he might (there was no promise; the "understanding" had it only that the boss "might") "open a pork barrel."

What is a pork barrel? There are several kinds of pork, but all barrels contain this one ingredient in common: a big appropriation of public money to be expended widely over the country. Bribery? Graft? No. A pork barrel isn't necessarily either a bribe or a graft; it is only treated as a graft and it just happens to operate like bribery. The pork barrel expected is a public building bill. Postoffices and other Federal buildings are needed in many places. The Speaker thinks we can't afford the money at present, but "your" average representative doesn't care about that, and neither does he care whether his district actually needs a Federal Building. And he says you don't either. He says (many of them have talked this way to me) you haven't any more sense of our common interests than he has; not so much. He says that anything he can get out of all of us for you, his particular constituents, will act upon you like a bribe. So that if he, by selling out his vote to the House combine, can get a Federal building for you in his district, you won't care how he votes on Statehood or the Philippine tariff; you will re-elect him to misrepresent himself and you in the hope that he will get something more out of all of us for you. In other words, you want a Representative who "gets things done"—for you.

Is he right? If "your" Congressman gets you a public building watch him preen himself over he returns home and then effect it has on you. That's tell whether a pork barrel like political corruption.
Whatever your answer, opening pork barrels is a typical method of the system. This is what have given you office—Arthur, Harrison, McKinley and Roosevelt?" I said in the tone of interrogation.

"I had never thought of the matter in just that way," Judge Taft replied. "While I was helping to put the criminals of Cincinnati where they belonged President Arthur appointed me to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of Ohio. I was 25 years old. There was considerable whisky and some tobacco in that region and we took in $12,000,000 a year as taxes. But I didn't like the life and resigned the office in eighteen months or so to practice law. About that time Thomas C. Campbell, an able and daring man, whose unprofessional conduct eventually led to a riot and the burning of the Cincinnati Courthouse, acquired such a reputation for dominating judges, corrupting juries and bribing witnesses that the Bar Association determined to disbar him. I was one of a committee of ten lawyers who were chosen to prosecute him and was made junior counsel in that effort. It was not a pleasant duty. I went around with Campbell himself and took testimony. Finally, we brought him to trial and the court split two to one in his favor. I was not prepared to address the court, not having a previous notion of doing so, but the senior counsel was taken ill and I was called on unexpectedly; but it proved to be my opportunity, for I was very familiar with the case.

"I didn't know it, but it was reported to me afterward that it was my argument in the Campbell case that had attracted Gov. Foraker's attention to me. He had acted as counsel for Campbell, not in the disbarment proceedings, but in a criminal prosecution preceding it. He was Judge Foraker then, a lawyer in active practice and had just been elected Governor of Ohio. When there was a vacancy on the bench of the Superior Court of Cincinnati, without the slightest solicitation he appointed me judge, to my great surprise. I was now 29 years of age and good fortune had put me where all of my professional hopes and ambitions had been centered and where I could and did learn some law at the expense of the public. Gov. Foraker increased my gratitude to him by wishing to have me nominated and elected to the office he had given me. Accordingly, he had requested George B. Cox, who was just then, in 1888, aspiring to political power, to assist me. Cox helped me and I was nominated by the convention. I say this to show you that I have had no personal quarrel with Cox. Our relations, such as they were, were always friendly."

It has been said that one of the chief causes of Myron T. Herrick's defeat for Governor in Ohio last year, was Secretary Taft's one speech of the campaign, delivered at Akron, in which he called the thunders of his eloquence upon the heads of the bosses. I asked him about the chastened and afflicted master of Southern Ohio.

"Cox must not be minimized in respect to his ability," Judge Taft replied. "He has great sagacity and much power in his personality. When he makes a ticket he weighs all the elements of the community; takes up classes and nationalities and proves his art and management. He is a rich man, I suppose, but I have a notion that he has repressed the rapacity of his underlings. We have been shamefully unmindful in the large cities of this country of our duty as citizens. Good men say they have all they can do with their own affairs. They seem to think that local bosses, if not exactly necessary, are altogether natural in our form of government. Therefore, they compare boss with boss and if the one they have gives them a fairly decent administration of public affairs they are content to let it go at that."

"What was your personal experience with Benjamin Harrison? He appointed you to be Solicitor-General of the United States and later to be a United States Circuit Judge."

"I became well acquainted with Gen. Harrison. It may surprise you to know that he loved humor and told funny stories with enthusiasm. However, he felt the responsibilities of his office to such a degree that he was suspicious of the motives of too many men who approached him, and treated them coldly. Thus he got the name of being deficient in passion and friendship. When he made me a judge in 1892 he gave me the Sixth Circuit. I now entered upon the work I loved. I had four fine States—Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and Tennessee. After a laborious term in hearing and writing opinions in the Court of Appeals it was a great pleasure to go upon the circuit and hear a jury docket. It was as good as a good play; it offered a fine study of human nature. But the salary of $6000 was inadequate, for I had to pay all of my traveling expenses in going over the circuit. When we sat in the Court of Appeals away from home we were allowed expenses. After Gen. Harrison left the Presidency he once or twice appeared before me to make a legal argument. He was a great lawyer—clear, learned and industrious."

"Will you tell me about your appointment to be president of the United States Philippine Commission?"

"One afternoon I was dictating a decision in the old Federal building in Cincinnati when a telegram was put into my hand. I tore it open and read: 'I shall take it as a great favor if you will call on me some time next week.' The telegram was signed by William McKinley. I couldn't imagine what the President wanted with me. I guessed, of course, and blundered. I came to Washington and on being shown into a room at the White House met the President and Secretary Long of the navy. Presently Elihu Root, Secretary of War, came in.

"'I want to send you to the Philippines,' the President said to me.

"'But,' I replied, 'I have thought from the first that we do not need the Philippines; that we can get along very well without them.'

"'So have I,' Mr. McKinley answered. 'But no matter what we have thought about it, we now have the Philippines and must take care of them. I ask you to be a member of the Philippine Commission; to go and assist to set up civil government as the army moves on.'

"I thought of my place on the bench a position for life and a work I liked better than any other, and was reluctant. The President suggested a leave of absence for six months or a year, but that would have put a heavier burden on my colleagues and I knew it to be impracticable. Then Secretary Root told me that I was at the turning of the ways in my life. 'You can take the easy road,' he said, 'remain on the bench and be comfortable, or you can do your country a service. For the first time in our history an opportunity opens and it is given to you. The way will be rough, you will have to make personal sacrifices, take risks and work hard.'

"I went home and argued the matter for two weeks. In the meantime Mr. McKinley advised me that I should be president of the commission. That is the way I came to go to the Philippines. And no two men ever gave another better support than Mr. McKinley and Secretary Root gave me. We followed the army and set up civil authority. Of course, there was some friction now and then between the two branches of government, each being enthusiastic and mindful of its own rights. When we differed I argued it out with Secretary Root by cable. Moreover, it was discovered that under Mr. McKinley's instructions we controlled the purse and that had a tranquilizing effect. The purse is a mighty harmonizer in all of the relations of life."

"I would call you the Pacifier of the Colonies. How do you proceed when you bring accord out of contention?"

"Well, nearly every quarrel begins in a misunderstanding, in an erroneous interpretation of the facts. When we went to the Philippines there was nothing to do at first but to investigate conditions, to get all the facts as well as we could. I had learned to do this, as I told you, while I was an assistant prosecuting attorney in Ohio. We examined and cross-examined many witnesses. We gave the Filipinos to understand that we meant to be fair and just and to observe the golden rule as closely as possible; that we were, in short, anxious to do the best we could for the Philippine people. The task of gaining the confidence of the Filipinos was not difficult, however. Of all the Oriental peoples they are the easiest to work with because they are Christians. Their ideas are unlike those of the Buddhists and Mohammedans, who are heathens. The patterns they follow in thought and action are in Europe and not Asia. But they are sensitive and quickly insulted and when their pride has been wounded they don't recover very soon.

"We are inclined to be harsh when we judge Latin and Oriental character. A Latin says: 'I am glad to meet you; my house is yours.' We interpret this literally and say the Latin is treacherous and his word is not good. We fail to remember that the customs of centuries have made him extravagant in his flowers of speech. He doesn't want to believe that he has given you his house. What he means and what he hopes you will understand is that he is willing to meet you more than half way in amicable relations, to live with you in friendship and peace. I am bound to say, however, that his eagerness to please has led in some degree to the wrong opinion held of him by many Americans. He doesn't comprehend the blunt manner of the man from the West, nor his rough speech. Furthermore, he has lived his life in form. Most of us are not inclined to be ceremonious and, therefore, pay scant attention to formalities, but in the Philippines we tried to be courteous, and to impress the Filipinos with the belief that we were honest and equitable. We invited them to the Palace of Malacanan and told them it belonged to them as much as to any one. I don't say this plan converted the revolutionists but I do think it made some of them less ferocious in their wishes for success.

"I went to the Philippines hostile to the thought of holding them but life and work there arouses in one a missionary spirit. The time seems to have come, moreover, when we must take a broader view of our duty and bearing toward other nations. We can't shut ourselves up with past traditions. We must do our part in the world and I think we are fortunate to begin with so promising a people as the Filipinos. It will take a long time to change them. Just now their views of liberty would give them absolutism."

"Will there be business opportunities in the Philippines for Americans?"

"For four or five years the Filipinos have had to endure all kinds of misfortune. Their cattle, which, with their land, is the base of their prosperity, have died from disease. Locusts have eaten their crops. Typhoons have distroyed their property. One bad crop is mended the next season but it requires some time to recover from a series of calamities, especially the death of draft cattle. Agriculture will be the source of wealth in the Philippines, a fact that must be remembered and duly considered by all Americans. Business is bad there now but the cattle are breeding and times will certainly improve."

"But as a pacifier you succeeded not alone in the Philippines and in Panama but in Rome?"

"I had a pleasant time in Rome, where I went to see about buying the lands of the Philippine friars and where I remained for six weeks. I had two audiences, of an hour each, with Leo XIII. Physically, he was only a breath, but intellectually, although past ninety, he was as brilliant and ready as ever, it seemed to me. He helped me in my business and was earnest in his desire to aid this government in every way. He took his stand and ultimately carried the matter through by appointing an able delegate to the Philippines and telling him to accord with us. I am not sure that all of his advisers agreed with him."

Judge Taft is a poor man, although his brother in Cincinnati, the financier of the family, has made a fortune in the newspaper business. While Governor of the Philippines he was paid $20,000 a year. He told a committee of Congress that he had to spend every cent of it. The lighting of the old palace in which he lived cost $125 a month and he spent $3,000 a year for servant hire. Knowing these things I asked him: "What are the personal sacrifices of a public career?"

"A man in office without means must abandon the hope of making the future of his family luxuriously comfortable. The American people of the past established the present scale of salaries for their public officers. It seems to have been satisfactory to the generations which followed, but I think it ought to be changed. All that a man can do under existing conditions to safeguard his family is to get his life insured. If he lives and become old he must shift for himself. One who has engaged in business must feel the satisfaction of achievement and the pleasures of independence for himself and his household. But all occupations have their ups and downs. The fascinations of public life are to be found in the power it gives and the wholesome opportunities it offers. If one has been fortunate and can look back on things well done it compensates for the loss of many others. It is a joy to do things, to be useful and helpful."

Twice has this robust, cheerful and conscientious man refused a place on the bench of the highest court in the land—the one great office to which he has aspired—because he believed his duty to be elsewhere. And Roosevelt has said of him: "There is not in this nation a higher or finer type of public servant than Governor Taft."

DEAFNESS CURED AT LAST

Wonderful New Discovery for the Positive Cure of Deafness and Head Noises

At last, after years of study and research, the wonderful Nature forces have been harnessed together and deafness can be cured. If I did not know positively that my method could cure, I would not allow my name to be connected with this treatment. My standing is such that I cannot afford to misrepresent or distort the facts. I know what this treatment will do and what it has done and can safely say, "It is the greatest, grandest and simplest in the world today." It seems to make no difference with this cure as to age and how long standing or deep seated the deafness is, its cures are permanent. Test your hearing with a watch. If you do not hear it five feet away, you are deaf. Write me giving age, sex, cause, how long deaf, if you have Catarrh, Rheumatism or Nervous trouble, and if you hear better in noisy places, and all particulars bearing on your case, and I will give you my truthful opinion as to whether your case is curable or not. I give an absolutely scientific opinion with a full explanation of your case and a Booklet on Deafness and Head Noises free without charge. The advice contained in this book has been the means of saving the hearing of hundreds of people. Another week of unparalleled success has placed us in a stronger position than ever before.

It is marvelous the way the public responds to our warfare of cut prices.

The fame of Brent's has spread broadcast throughout the nation. The ridiculous incapacity of the Los Angeles furniture Trust is the basis of many a jest between manufacturers.

The public of Los Angeles, gifted with intelligence far above the average city, has given the bravest support to Brent's.

When this store first began its crusade against the Trust, if for any unknown reason Brent's had been unable to gain the upper hand, the city of Los Angeles would have been absolutely at the mercy of this combination.

It is therefore gratifying not only to Brent's but to every citizen of Los Angeles that this store has not only gained an impregnable position, but the Trust has been so utterly routed and defeated that it is now an easy matter to undersell it from 25 per cent. to 40 per cent. on every known article in the furniture and house furnishing line.

"Trust" Methods Exposed.

HIGHEST PRICE PAID BY CITY FOR FURNISHINGS.

From the "Record" of Feb. 10th, 1906.

"Last August the building committee of the council * * * * * asked three furniture companies, who are members of the "combine", for estimates on desks, revolving desk chairs, arm chairs, settees, opera chairs, cornice and portieres, linoleum, body Brussels carpet, and decorations and refinishings, for the council chamber. No houses not in the "combine" were allowed to submit estimates.

Without advertising for bids, Blanchard ordered that the goods be purchased from a member of the combine.

The highest prices were paid for everything. An instance is shown in the price paid for linoleum, $1.85 per yard."

Brent's regular retail price for this same linoleum, including "laying" is only $1.30 the yard—55c a yard below the Trust price.

Carload of Damaged Pianos $135 Up

Get One Before They Are Gone

An entire carload of pianos, which were insecurely packed, rubbed each other so that their cases have become scratched or otherwise marred.

The parties responsible for the damage will be compelled to make good the loss, and instead of attempting to refinish the cases we shall close out the pianos at sensational prices ranging from as low as $135.

Except for the outside blemishes the pianos are in perfect condition, having all the latest improvements, extra rich tone, perfect action and in fact magnificent types of the highest art in piano making.

THE OPEN SHOP—Strike of the Typographical Union a Dismal Failure

CURRENT COMMENT.

Patrick Dolan, president of the Pittsburgh District of the United Mine Workers of America, is probably more hated by his fellow-laborites than any one in America. The cause is simply that he is proving himself to be a thorn in the side of Mitchell and his co-conspirators against the peace and welfare of the mining regions, of the owners and operators, of the men who toil underground, and of the American people.

Mr. Dolan evidently knows what he is talking about. He has been in the thick of union fights for thirty-five years, according to his own statement. He has served his apprenticeship in both America and Scotland, and has seen the many vicissitudes of the unions in their continual conflicts with capital. No doubt the enemies of decency will have their usual tales to tell of him. With these, however, we are not concerned. The point is that he has learned a bitter lesson, and has taken the stand that is for the best interests of all decent, law-abiding citizens.

John Mitchell has been the subject of many a sketch and many a story, some favorable and others unfavorable, but seldom has there been a more scathing arraignment of his blundering stupidity and mismanagement, not to say criminality, than that which Patrick Dolan has given to the world in his statement to the Associated Press, in which he explains his vote at the Indianapolis convention in favor of the present wage scale: "Let us be honest about these things," he says. "Our wages have been increased more than 100 per cent. and our hours of labor have been decreased from ten to eight hours since 1897." He then asks if the miners should jeopardize all this and adds:

"Mark Hanna settled the first anthracite strike for us, and President Roosevelt settled the second. Nobody has settled our big soft coal strikes, because we have lost them. President Mitchell's big soft coal strike was in the Southwest. It lasted eighteen months, and ended in utter failure. Hundreds of good men were victimized. The second soft coal strike was in Maryland, where our people of the entire State were utterly defeated. His other disastrous soft coal strike was in Kentucky, where our people were beaten. In Colorado, where the organization spent over $500,000, our union was wiped off the face of the earth; in West Virginia, Central District, we were defeated; in the Cabin Creek District, in West Virginia, where the organization spent $300,000, we lost; in the Myersdale District we spent $400,000, and were defeated. At the present time we have a strike of 8000 miners in Alabama, which has been on for nineteen months. They are striking against a 10 per cent. reduction. Under the Ryan resolution, which says all districts must get 12 1-2 per cent. advance over the present scale, the Alabama operators will have to withdraw their demand for a 10 per cent. reduction and give the 12 1-2 per cent. advance, or a total difference of 22 1-2 per cent. before any other district in the country can settle. How is this to be brought about?"

Mitchell has not offered any adequate reply as yet. It is unlikely that he ever will. There is a good reason why he will not; he cannot.

Mr. Dolan has refused to resign at the demand of the Indianapolis convention, and declares that he is subject only to local unions in his district. Let us hope that he represents the real sentiment of the miners, the men who work with their hands and not with their jaws.

VALUE OF TRADE SCHOOLS.

The Citizens' Alliance has determined upon the establishment in Palo Alto of one of the greatest trade schools in the country where the youth, now outlawed by the unions, will be given a chance to acquire the means of livelihood. The importance of this movement cannot be overestimated. What can be accomplished by industrial education and freedom, as opposed to what is accomplished by union tyranny with its system of limiting apprentices to the smallest possible number, can be seen and contrasted by comparing the present condition of England with that of Germany.

In the Kaiser's domains industrial education plays a most important part. Boys are trained to work, to learn useful trades, and they come from school skilled mechanics, taught as thoroughly as doctors, lawyers and professional men are trained. There are labor unions in Germany, but their power is slight compared with the power which they have in Great Britain and America. They are not allowed to prevent the rising generation from acquiring a practical training, and they are not permitted to throttle the industries of the nation.

In England, on the other hand, the walking delegate has acquired a power that is equal to and in many ways greater than that of his kind in America. There are few, if any, industrial schools, and the boys must learn trades, if at all, under union rules which so limit the number of apprentices that thousands are unable to learn any trade except such trades as require little or no skill, and can often scarcely be called trades.

One of the results of these conditions is that Germany is rapidly becoming a great manufacturing nation. The Kaiser's subjects are capturing trade all over the globe. While wages are low, we do not hear of thousands walking the streets crying for bread. We do not hear of any Coxey's army marching on Berlin to demand that the Reichstag give them work.

In England how is the case? Just the opposite. Once the markets of the world were hers. Once the British Isles were the center of manufacturing. Today we read that German-made goods are selling in London, Birmingham and Sheffield. Frequent cablegrams tell of the misery that prevails among the poor of London, of the thousands of unemployed who are walking the streets, of the distribution of charity and the formation of great mobs to surround the House of Parliament and demand relief.

In all this we see more plainly than words can tell the signs of the times. Let us heed the obvious warning. Let us give our boys a chance to be skilled, prosperous contented workmen, instead of being driven into the overcrowded ranks of unskilled labor, or worse yet, to crime. This is a question for every American to study well, and for every parent to consider. The Citizens' Alliance has answered the question, as its intelligent and patriotic members view it, by the decision to establish the trade school at Palo Alto.

WHO PRODUCES WEALTH?

The stock argument always heard for the unions' and socialists' side of the labor and ownership-of-property questions is that "all wealth is the product of labor, therefore labor should control the proceeds." The fallacy of this argument has been often shown, but it is doubtful if a better illustration can be found than by referring to industrial conditions in Mexico and in the other Latin-American countries twenty years ago and now.

Mexico has and always has had, an abundance of labor. There are millions of laborers, anxious to get employment, yet with all this the country lay undeveloped, its resources going to no good purpose and benefiting no one until capital was imported from abroad to furnish the essential thing to begin work. Brains and energy were needed, and without them labor was useless. But when Mexico got the necessary combination of capital, brains and labor to handle her resources, everything changed, and today few nations can boast of better progress than our neighbor on the south.

In our own country the same conditions are shown every day, but the fact that Mexico had to go abroad and get foreigners to furnish the capital for development makes the fact more striking. The Mexican Central Railroad, for example, was built by the labor of Mexican peones and by the wealth and enterprise of American capitalists. He would be a radical socialist, indeed, who would assert that the labor of the peones who laid ties and rails gave them any valid claim to having produced the wealth that has flowed from that enterprise or any part thereof.

TYPOTHETAE'S WINNING BATTLE.

DEMANDS OF UNION PRINTERS ARE INDEFENSIBLE.

The Daily Metropolitan Press in Jeopardy Because of Control That Lawless Bands Attempt to Exercise. Letters from Gen. Otis to American Industries.

(The following letter is reproduced from "American Industries" of February 1, 1906, where it was first published:)

OFFICE OF THE TIMES,
Los Angeles, Jan. 19, 1906.

Mr. Marshall Cushing, Secretary American Manufacturers' Association, 170 Broadway, New York.—Dear Sir: Answering your inquiry, I have to respond as follows:

The large newspapers generally must be involved sooner or later in strikes, losses, annoyance and perhaps the interruption of their issues, unless they commence and prosecute a successful fight for the open-shop conditions.

This danger is obvious; both the situation and the menace are perfectly clear to me. The only permanent and sure relief is in free-labor conditions, with the rights of all employers and all independent workmen guaranteed, as they should be, under the Constitution and the law.

I believe that thousands of publishers, especially of metropolitan newspapers, are aware of the secret dangers that exist: in fact, live in hourly fear of them, apprehending their appearance upon the scene at almost any time. Lawless visitations ever come like a thief in the night.

It is a great shame and a grave menace to popular liberty—which includes industrial liberty, personal liberty, political liberty and religious liberty—that any portion of the press of the country should be subjected to the thraldom with which the typographical unions, as managed in these latter days, are attempting to surround an institution that ought to be free—the freest of all American institutions, the unfettered defender of republican liberty.

The press, and especially the daily metropolitan press, is in jeopardy because of the control which these banded and often lawless unionists attempt to exercise over the composing rooms, the press rooms, the stereotype rooms, the business offices, and even (with shame, be it said!) the editorial rooms, whose controllers are sometimes so involved and fettered that they are compelled or constrained to display the union label, the totem, the "badge of servitude," as I denounce it to be, in the very columns of their newspapers, while publicly professing that they publish independent American journals! Newspaper employers ought to be the freest in all the land, instead of submissively wearing shackles, as they too often do.

A strange and unaccountable misapprehension of the real situation with respect to so-called "organized labor" seems to pervade the minds of many editors and publishers who ought to have stronger hearts and clearer heads. This misapprehension lies in the groundless assumption on the part of too many journalists that "organized labor" means the people—means all labor, or the great body of labor. Nothing could be further from the truth.

There is, consequently, no need for employers to stand in awe of the despotic unions. They have been and can be resisted with impunity and with success. You know the history of the Los Angeles Times. The employer who in a panic surrenders to strikers and boycotters is weak and unwise, the enemy of his own best interests. To resist unjust demands from an organized minority is the part of duty and interest; it is his duty to himself, to the cause of personal and industrial freedom, and to the great body of free labor, which is not organized and so remains independent.

Organized labor notoriously constitutes only a very small fragment of all the labor of the country. Many employments cannot from their peculiar character be organized, and the workers in them would not organize if they could. They prefer to be free and to act their parts within the law and under the flag, like American citizens proud of their heritage.

One ever-protruding vice in the indefensible position assumed by trades unionists resides in the fact that they lay claim to superior rights and privileges merely because they are "organized." The claim is monstrous; it is a disregard and defiance of the very law under which we live. It is utterly untenable; it has not a leg to stand upon. Some subservient legislators and pinchbeck statesmen are afflicted with the same aberration. Such men do not know the Constitution nor the law of the land, or, knowing, ignore them. No such claim can be supported under our republican system, which guarantees to all citizens equal rights without regard to class, condition, occupation, alliance or organization. In the very nature of the case the non-union or unorganized workman possesses, and under the law must possess, every right, privilege and immunity—that can be possessed or claimed by the union or organized workman.

No workman, of whatever class, should be compelled to be a "joiner" against his will. It is not thus that the liberty of Americans can be maintained. It is not thus that the greatest good can be won for the greatest number. It is not thus that justice can be guaranteed to citizens without regard to class, station, employment, alliance or organization.

No private clique or combination, no edict of any union, should be permitted to wrest from any honest citizen, whether employer or laborer, that to which he is entitled under the supreme law of the land, namely, his lawful right to pursue undisturbed, unhampered and untaxed (save by his government) any lawful occupation of his choice, provided only that it be pursued in a lawful manner.

This proposition is fundamental and cannot be overthrown by all the false logic of all the organized shouters, all the demagogic politicians, all the subservient newspapers, all the weak judges, and all the spineless statesmen combined.

If we are to preserve that measure of liberty which was vouchsafed to us as citizens under the American system, we must fight against the invasion of it which is attempted every time a combination of trades unionists seeks to take their employers and their fellow laborers by the throat for attempting to exercise their natural and lawful rights. The strike and the boycott, with violence and picketing thrown in, amount to conspiracy in law, and conspiracy is crime.

There is no lasting or genuine benefit in the degenerate trades-unionism of these modern days. All the good, if good there be, which the labor union bosses and walking delegates claim has come from the organization of labor in the various trades has been more than offset by the evils, the losses, the suffering and the distress which have followed numberless unwarranted strikes and been their logical product.

Months and even years of needless idleness following unjustifiable strikes have brought such grave evils to individual workers that no amount of organization and no increase of wages (when increases have been secured) could possibly offset them. In short, there is nothing but evil in strikes, boycotts, proscription and club violence, so freely used against brother workmen and against employers who make labor and wages possible.

Too many of the unwise, insane and vicious labor leaders are prone to preach the absurd and impossible doctrine that the workman, in order to better his condition, should deliberately cease working and join the ranks of the idlers. They say to their dupes in effect: "Idleness is better for you than employment; stop work, cease to earn wages; obey (and pay) us, and you will thrive and be happy!" No argument can be had with ignorant and deluded industrial economists of that class.

In order that the highest measure of industrial and individual good shall be achieved in the country at large it is necessary that the largest possible number of citizens who seek to live by the labor of their hands or heads, or by both, shall be guaranteed the right and opportunity of working freely, of carrying on at will those employments and operations which are wage-earning and wealth-producing. Labor is wealth-producing if it be pursued with industry, intelligence and persistency. Idleness, on the contrary, is poverty-producing. Millions are thrown away every year through avoidable idleness.

Then the aim should be, everywhere and always, on the part of good citizens of all classes to make and keep the field of labor a free field, in order that the workers therein may do their tasks and carry on their operations unhindered, untaxed, untrammeled and unafraid.

To compass these vital results, to secure to labor its greatest possible outcome, is the duty of the government, where government intervention becomes necessary because of violations of law and the attempted deprivation or curtailment of individual rights.

If idleness is to be done away with: if want, distress and misery are to be averted; if unhappiness is to be banished, industry promoted and competence and wealth increased, then production must be brought to its highest standard. Production is wealth, and the widest possible distribution of the products of toil becomes an economic necessity for the good of all. But where production is cut in half, distribution becomes scant, wealth is curtailed, comforts are diminished, poverty ensues and misery prevails.

Who would see this deplorable condition of things when it can be averted by right measures, by equal opportunities, in short, by industrial freedom prevailing everywhere within the borders of the nation?

These propositions are obvious to all thinking and impartial men, especially to those whose business it is to make and enforce the laws. Yet, despite the truth of what I here declare, there are too many, in high places and low, who are still indifferent to the greatest danger which menaces the republic today—the danger of industrial freedom becoming permanently invaded by the aggressive tactics of misguided trades unionists, a small minority though they be of all the labor of the land.

The United Typothetae is fighting a just, brave and hard battle, but it must win in the end. The very fact that industrial despotism has long threatened employing printers has made this organization possible and essential. Its members saw the need of organization and mobilization, and they got together, like manly, independent American citizens, and arrayed themselves in a solid phalanx to oppose the unjust aggressions of that audacious monopoly, organized labor—the closest monopoly and the greatest trust in all the land today.

The demand for an eight-hour day, with nine-hours' pay, is absurd and indefensible; the Typothetae is right in resisting that demand. A better and more equitable basis of employment and wages would be the hour, making that the unit instead of the day, and varying the number of hours of work from time to time, if need be, according to the practical requirements of the business. This rule would be just to both sides, and, moreover, it would be a practical, workable rule in nearly all cases.

The members of the Typothetae boldly proclaim and defend the sound proposition that he who makes the pay-roll has the right to control the business, always, of course, within the limitations of law and reason. The Typothetae, in short, "demands recognition."

I long ago advocated, in the meetings of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, the project of listing, classifying and registering the non-union printers of the United States, and of establishing schools for teaching apprentices in the use of the linotype. This measure, persistently and intelligently followed up, will bring relief. Besides increasing the number of non-union linotype operators, compositors, pressmen and stereotypers it will have the other inevitable effect of serving notice on the banded union despots that they do not own the printing offices of the United States and shall not control them. It will tend to put the fear of God into their hearts, if that be possible, and to make them recognize the rights of their employers and of their fellow workmen outside the unions.

What the employing book and job printers, allied under the banner of the Typothetae, are doing for themselves and for the cause of free labor, the newspaper owners and employers will yet be compelled to do. It is a common cause, and all who are engaged in any branch of the printing and publishing business may well stand together for their common good. A firm alliance and a solid front will wrest victory from defeat, throw off the thraldom of industrial despotism, secure industrial freedom, and achieve the greatest good for all concerned, even including the very men who are most busy in producing unnecessary suffering, idleness and want in the domain of labor.

These reckless and unreasonable unionists know not what they do, and it is the mission of just employers, while protecting their own interests, to save the deluded ones from themselves.

HARRISON GRAY OTIS.

"Doing Up 'The Times'."

Since Palo Alto's so-called union printers are doing without things they need these days in order to keep up their assessments for helping along the Typographical Union strikes in various parts of the country, it might be well just now to remind them of that which they know only too well already; that the hundreds of thousands of dollars they have contributed to put the Los Angeles Times out of business has availed wonders in the way of making The Times the grandest, greatest and possibly the best newspaper in the United States. It is getting bigger and better each and every issue, it is reaching more people than ever before and it is doing more good than perhaps any other paper in the nation. Union printers of America would have fared better, would have been happier, would have enjoyed life the more, would have had more to eat and drink and wear, would have provided better homes for their wives and babies, would have done more for society, for religion and for their country, if they had never paid any attention to Harrison Gray Otis and The Times. But, sheep-like, they have continued for decades following their leaders and butting their damphool heads against walls of adamant in the "laudable" work of "doing up The Times." They are still at it and The Times is still growing.—[Palo Alto Citizen.

Acts of Unions Condemned.

The practices of the Building Trades Council of St. Louis are severely condemned by the December grand jury in a report submitted to Judge James E. Withrow today, says a dispatch from St. Louis to the San Francisco Chronicle.

The grand jury recommended that immediate steps be taken to enact State laws covering intimidation, extortion and conspiracy in restraint of trade, for the specific purpose of regulating the trades unions. The report declares that the policy of the unions is not only illegal but subversive of personal and property rights.

Many specific acts are referred to in the report in which contractors have been subjected to annoyance and needless expense by unjustifiable strikes, and what the grand jury terms the "lawless, arbitrary and foolish acts of labor unions."

The report declares that mechanics cannot get employment unless they join unions and pay almost prohibitory initiation fees; that the making of apprentices is under such strict regulation that a proprietor cannot even teach his own son a trade in his own shop; that contractors have been forced into making agreements not to use a material from a sub-contractor who is deemed unfair to labor unions, and that investments cannot be made in building enterprises without being subject to artificial conditions created by the illegal acts of the Building Trades Council and the unions affiliated with it.

STRIKE DEAD IN CHICAGO.

Printers Failed to Establish Closed Shop.

Craven Newspapers Which Suppress the Truth.

Public Sentiment in Favor of the Open Door.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Feb. 12.—The strike of the typesetters, inaugurated January 1, is practically settled here in Chicago. The only requisite on the part of the employers is endurance, and there is a full stock of this on hand. It has not been a spectacular strike like that of the teamsters. The public sees little of the struggle. There is no open fighting in the streets, and to the honor of the union be it said, little slugging. The typographical union is one of the most orderly of all the unions, and not much physical violence is resorted to. Still, it is true that more than one man has been secretly waylaid and cruelly beaten for no other offense than that of attempting to fill the position left vacant by a striker; and one employer tells me of several girls in his employ who succumbed to nervous prostration and were compelled to spend six months at one time in the hospital as a result of the long intimidation, and this, too, preceding the declaration of the strike. Tales of heroism, of dangers faced by the employers who stood their ground for the open shop and the nine-hour day, are so common that one is fain to ask if this can be free America. More than once, as I sat listening to the sane, strong, steady words of one and another of the heads of the great business enterprises here in Chicago, have I marveled at the quiet composure, the unflinching heroism required to stand fast to their principles. Verily, all wars are not fought on battlegrounds; there are Gettysburgs and Shilohs in these very shops, and heroes here as true and brave as ever carried a musket.

PUBLIC PAYS THE COST.

Because of the fact that this strike is less spectacular, the public should bear in mind that it (the public) is greatly concerned in the outcome, more probably than the teamsters' strike of last year. If the typographical union wins it is the public who will have to pay the increased cost. At least 20 per cent. will be added to everything printed that the people have to buy. They will pay more for books and magazines—or get less in them. They will pay more for advertising matter and more for printed stationery. In the ultimate end, other unions will force other commodities up in the same scale, and meats and groceries, clothing and furniture will all increase in price.

SUPPRESSING THE TRUTH.

In addition to the fact that this strike is not impressed upon public notice by any spectacular conditions, is the startling fact that news concerning it is not published in the newspapers. It is a disgrace to them, but it is true, that not a single Chicago newspaper dares to come out and publish the truth, if such truth is against the unions. I first discovered this fact when I was spending the Christmas holidays away from Chicago and was very desirous of obtaining the latest information concerning the struggle. I took up the papers as I would have done in Los Angeles, expecting to obtain the most recent news upon all subjects of national importance. To my extreme surprise I could find almost nothing on the subject, which was at that very moment of eminent concern to hundreds of employers right here in Chicago alone. A few lines hidden away in some obscure part of the paper summed up all that they had to say on the subject. Later, when I returned to Chicago, I made this a subject of inquiry, and found to my utter surprise that not a paper dared to publish the actual truth for fear its compositors would refuse to set up the type. More than once, when an item appeared in the make-up of the issue that was not in favor with the compositors, they demanded that it be cut out or they would strike instantly, and no issue of the paper would be the result. These are two important reasons why the present struggle is not in the eyes of the public; yet far more than any recent strike it is of general and vital interest. Although the strike was set for January 1, most of the Typothetae declared for the open shop and the nine-hour day in September. One very pertinent fact has come under my notice. A woman who has been for several years on the staff of one of the large Chicago dailies, has in addition to her regular duties been doing outside work for eastern publications. Latterly such work assumed the form of labor articles, and she was informed by the head of the paper that she must either give up her labor articles or lose her position on the staff of the paper. She was in a great dilemma, because, while the outside work was the more remunerative, her newspaper work was regular, and having others dependent upon her she was forced to give up her labor articles with the very ungenerous compromise that such as were already accepted might be printed.

A LOSING GAME.

Of the striking compositors in Chicago, many have left the city and gone elsewhere to enter new shops as non-union men. Others are living off the benefactions of the union, accepting seven dollars per week where they have been accustomed to earn from fifteen to twenty-one dollars per week. There are a few to whom this seems a very jolly state of affairs, to do no work, and yet get paid for idleness. But it soon palls. These men really dislike idleness. They are workers, and in addition to this fact, the women of their households will not long submit to the deprivation required to live on this amount. They want butter and beefsteak, to say nothing of dresses and hats. Few people are born martyrs or heroes. So the wage-earner betakes himself to new scenes of labor, and the union loses him.

It is a losing game all around. The men who are all skilled workers are placed in unaccustomed surroundings; conditions are new, the stock is new to them, the work is different; strange faces are about them instead of the old familiar ones; they are away from home. The same kind of work is harder because of these conditions, and they have in addition to all this a sneaking sense of having run away from the fight that they have themselves helped to precipitate. The new workers are daily becoming better accustomed to their work and to the new conditions, and, as I stated in the beginning, patience on the part of the employers is all that is needed to win out. Union funds must necessarily grow less, idle men must necessarily grow weary of idleness, open shops will turn off better work, and it is already a foregone conclusion that one more great strike has become a failure.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

Public sentiment is in favor of the open shop, and is very lenient with delays. All open shops are now running full handed. The strike practically began in September of last year, as the Typothetae at that time declared for the open shop. Now more men than ever before are at work in the open shops. Misleading reports are being sent out from the union headquarters to the effect that "only about 30 per cent. of the establishments in Chicago are working on the open-shop principle, while 70 per cent. are union shops." This is true literally, but the open shops employ 80 per cent. of the compositors, the closed shops being mostly small ones and outside of the business centers.

It is a very pertinent fact that most of the union men are foreigners, and, as such, are accustomed to dictation. It is because of this that they yield so readily to orders from the walking delegate, and the members of the Typothetae have wisely concluded that dictation, not discussion, is the present need. When a point is reached, as it must be, sooner or later, where contracts can be made that will be binding for a term of years, and the employers are enabled to look into the future and make their own contracts with the world of demand, then the time may be ripe for a general discussion. At present the Typothetae must dictate or the union will, and since it is the former who must run the business, and bring in the money, it goes without saying that they must declare how the business must be run.

IMPOSSIBLE DEMANDS.

The Typothetae is making the fight of its life, and incidentally for its life. It is not a question of the eight-hour day; that might be cheerfully granted if the employers could be certain that the union would stop at that, and make binding contracts on that basis for a term of years. But, under present demands of the union, the employer is precluded the possibility of running his own shop. It is the employed who would settle the hours of labor, and not only for such as wish these limitations, but for those as well who desire to work longer hours. It is the union that regulates the output of the closed shop. It says that each man shall do so much, and no more. It compels the expert to kill time, and puts a premium on incompetence. It curtails the output, and at the same time puts up wages, and it is impossible that it should be otherwise than that the buying public must pay for all this. The head of the business must make a fair profit, or he has no adequate reason for running his business. It is not just a bureau for paying wages to workmen. Even the foreman in a closed shop does not represent the firm who employs and pays him, but he represents the union, and the head of the firm may take his choice of yielding to the demands of the union, an intolerable state of affairs, or doing what the Typothetae are doing at present, running their own business with new help. It would be impossible for the Typothetae to succeed in this fight if it were not that the great buying public is in sympathy with the effort. Many business men have sent in to the heads of open shops word that they will stand by them in this battle, and when inconvenience, and even loss has resulted because of the impossibility of filling their orders at a stated time, they have cheerfully put up with it all for the sake of the ultimate end to be gained.

THE OLD STORY.

So it is the old story over again—disinterested and innocent parties suffering for the striker. All strikes are deplorable. If half the energy that goes to waste in producing and carrying them on could be used in preventing their occurrence, humanity everywhere would benefit.

Despite my knowledge that he is in the wrong, my sympathy goes out to the striking workman, even while my judgment is with the employer. The streets are cold and wind-swept. Storms drive over this great lake and beat against the city's feet. Bitter cold the winds that beat in from the west, and howl around the buildings. And I know that in many of the homes of the compositors who were until recently successful wage-earners, there is lack and loneliness. In some there is a pitiful seven dollars a week doled out by the union, instead of the eighteen or twenty that the father was accustomed to earn, and the man himself is frequenting saloons, or is idle, and so, unhappy and troublesome. In others the mother gathers her little ones and, lonely and sad, receives the money sent back by the husband, who, too manly to face idleness, has gone to a distant city and entered some open shop as a stranger. No newspaper article can even touch upon the heartaches and anxiety, the separations and loneliness that are the direct result of the present strike of the compositors. What can be placed on the other side of the ledger to balance this account?

Two of Chicago's greatest men have passed out from its activities during my stay here—Marshall Field from the world of finance, an honest millionaire; Dr. Harper from the world of letters, a scholar whom future ages will delight to honor. Success came to these men through increased efforts and long hours of labor, not by time wasted by striving to give as little as they could toward its fulfillment.

As I sat in the office of one of the big buildings and saw the flag lowered to half-mast that told to Chicago her loss of the world-noted financier, and later passed the closed doors and shrouded windows of the great emporium, I remembered that he never failed to visit each department every day and personally inspect its working; a fine example for those who advocate the principle of giving as little as possible and taking as much as they can get.

I find that Los Angeles is spoken of here as the city that is free from strikes, and I sincerely hope the City of Angels—it truly looks it now, in the midst of these icy streets, like a bit of the Promised Land—may long deserve her title.

ORKERS' PAGE—Some Interesting Facts About the Ostrich Industry.

The Ostrich Industry.

THE BIG BIRDS WERE INTRODUCED INTO AMERICA, WITH POINTS AS TO THEIR SUCCESSFUL REARING.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

ostrich roams wild through a large part of Africa, especially in the interior of both the extreme north and the extreme south; it is also found in Asia, from Arabia to India. Ostriches have been domesticated in [illegible], Egypt, and the Cape of Good Hope, and even by wild tribes in Asia. The domestication in South Africa, especially in the Cape Colony, began half a century ago. At present half a million ostriches are kept on ranches or farms.

The exportation of ostrich feathers from Cape Town is principally to London. From London the continent of Europe is supplied, and more so the United States, which also directly imports even more than it gets through London.

The Boer war caused an interruption in the ostrich industry. Some of the farms where the birds were kept were destroyed; in almost all the [illegible] the birds were not properly fed. The importation of feathers in London, formerly amounting to [illegible] pounds per month, dwindled [illegible], and at no time during the war was over 20,000 pounds in any one month. Since then it has recovered, and now amounts to 40,000 pounds per month.

Prices of Feathers.

Before the war prices in London, [illegible], were as follows: For the wing feathers, first quality, $30 a pound; second quality $20. Tail [illegible] $3 to $4, according to their color, drab, gray, black, byock (which is white with black spots) or pure white. Small feathers on wing and between the big feathers, from $1 to $3. So-called "Spaddens" which are wing feathers of young birds, $1 to $4. Small feathers on the same [illegible] larger feathers as low as [illegible] cents.

All these prices now have nearly [illegible]. Recently as high as $150 has been paid for a pound of unusually fine feathers.

Importing Birds from South Africa.

From the Cape Colony ostriches have been exported to Australia. Quite an ostrich industry has been started there, and Australia partly supplies the London market, though at this moment only to about one-sixth the extent that South Africa does.. In [illegible], however, the colonial parliament at Cape Town, dreading competition from Australia, established an export duty on ostriches, amounting to $500 a bird, and $100 on an egg.

That same year, just before the duty took effect, Dr. Prothero, of Cape Town, chartered at Port Elizabeth, in the Cape Colony, a vessel for the purpose of shipping to Galveston, Tex., [illegible] four-year old ostriches. During the passage eight died. The [illegible]-two survivors he took by rail to San Francisco, Cal. There he exhibited them; and the next year, in [illegible], sold them for $21,000 to an organized company capitalized at $50,000.

The birds were taken by rail, over the Southern Pacific, to Da Costa, now called Armand. Thence they were hauled in wagons with high sides to a place near Centralia, on land belonging to the Stearns Rancho Company. That company had succeeded to the title granted to one Abel Stearns, to whom the Spanish crown in 1818 made a grant of six contiguous tracts of land, aggregating 300,000 acres. The stockholders in the ostrich company were stockholders in the Stearns Rancho Company. Mr. R. J. Northam, general agent of the Stearns Rancho Company, became superintendent of the ostrich farm, with a manager under him. This was the first ostrich farm started in the United States, with an abortive attempt in Florida left out of account.

Ostrich Farming in California.

For the first three years Dr. Sketchley, an Englishman, was manager under Mr. Northam. But in [illegible] there arrived in California a native of the Cape Colony, of English descent, Mr. Edward Atherton. From his earliest youth in South Africa he had been engaged in ostrich farming. In January 1887 he succeeded Dr. Sketchley. His first care was to move the ostriches away from Centralia, because the location was not sufficiently high and dry, to another part of the Stearns Rancho Company [illegible] miles from where is now the town of Fullerton. The distance was ten miles.

There were then forty birds; about as many males as females. Among them were twenty of the originally imported, whereof only two had died. Thus far the company had sold no birds but kept all it raised. Some eggs had been sold. The first year Mr. Atherton raised nine birds; the second year fifty. The third and fourth years he raised only a few, as the company had become financially embarrassed.

In 1891 a sheriff's sale took place, to satisfy a judgment held by Mr. R. J. Northam, the superintendent, amounting to $1500. There were then 170 Birds. Mr. Northam bought all, with the exception of a few sold to Mr. Cawston, about whom more anon, and a couple sold to a party at Santa Ana. After having bought the ostriches, Mr. Northam also bought the forty acres whereupon the ranch is located. Mr. Atherton remained manager. In that same year he raised six birds; the next year none; in 1893 115. Mr. Atherton then entered into partnership with Mr. Northam, starting with eighty birds, the others having been sold. Some were only a year old. In 1895 he went for a year to England. On his return he bought Mr. Northam's interest in the birds and fixtures, whereof he since has ever been sole owner. He also took a lease of the forty acres, and has since acquired the fee simple.

Scenes on an ostrich farm.

As stated before, in 1882 the Cape parliament established an export duty on ostriches and eggs. Mr. Cawston, an enterprising Englishman, now well-known here, was then in South Africa. He undertook to smuggle a flock of ostriches from the Cape colony into Natal, in which latter colony there was no duty—a formidable task through vast wildernesses of hundreds of miles. After many romantic adventures he succeeded. At Norwalk he established a farm whereon to raise ostriches, which farm he has only very recently moved to the La Habra valley. At South Pasadena he established another farm, not for raising but for exhibiting ostriches, which last named farm, now so popular and widely known, has ever since existed. Mr. Cawston added a shop where young ladies make all kinds of articles of dress and ornament from feathers, and he is just now preparing a regular factory for working up ostrich feathers, such as are carried on in New York City and San Francisco.

Ostriches like isolation when hatching; hence a show farm is not the place for hatching. Besides himself raising ostriches Mr. Cawston regularly buys birds from Mr. Atherton. Cawston knows best how to turn an ostrich into money; and Atherton understands most thoroughly how to produce the best bird.

After the sheriff's sale mentioned before, where Mr. Northam bought all the birds, Mr. Cawston at once bought forty from him.

At factories feathers are dyed, so as to give a lower priced feather the appearance of a higher priced one; small and cheap feathers are pieced together in order to add to the value; additional curls are given, etc.

Fine Feathers Produced Here.

The plumes of ostriches raised in California are even finer than those from South Africa, because the night being cooler nature provides a warmer cover. The plumes of birds born here, not of birds imported, are heavier and more fluffy.

Strange to say, notwithstanding the import duty under the Dingley act, manufacturers at New York and San Francisco rather order their feathers from London or Cape Town than buy those produced in California. For this reason: They require larger quantities than as yet are produced here, and feathers of particular kinds, in varying proportions. Mr. Atherton often has to ship his feathers from here to London, though the San Francisco factory may import feathers from there. Could he supply regularly and as much as is needed it would not be necessary, as at present, to send from Fullerton to London, and thence back to San Francisco.

Managing the Birds.

An ostrich farm has here to be sheltered against north wind. The ground has to slope, so that there be good drainage. Everything has to be smooth, so that the bird can have, say, half a mile run. In South Africa it is only on level land, as along streams, that the ostrich is found—or on plains; not among hills. Birds there are known to have reached the age of 50 years.

Birds are full grown at the age of four years. The male then will weigh about two hundred pounds, and stand four feet high from the ground to the top of the back, and eight feet from the ground to the head erect. The feathers of all birds are picked every nine months, which may bring it in any season. The bird to be picked is driven into the corner of a V.-shaped fence where its head is covered with a sack. A full grown male will give eighteen pounds of feathers, about equally divided between wings, tail and small intermediate feathers. Picking begins when the bird is six months old.

The young birds are kept together till from two and a-half to three years old. Fifty young birds require a corral of at least ten acres; and twenty or even a hundred acres will be better. All quite young birds are of a uniform dun color. There is no difference in appearance between male and female till from fifteen to eighteen months old. Then with the males black and white and with the females white and gray feathers begin to show, till at four years of age the distinction is complete. When sex begins to show the birds are segregated in pairs, as then the males begin to fight each other. Each pair requires a paddock about an acre. Males and females are selected into pairs as may seem most suitable. The birds do not pair themselves, for the ostrich by nature is a polygamist, not a monogamist. A male roves in nature with from three to six females.

Both here and elsewhere a hen lays from fifteen to eighteen eggs. As a rule from 10 to 25 per cent. will not hatch, although Mr. Atherton once had seventeen eggs in a nest, all of which hatched. The nest is merely a hole dug in the ground. When in nature a male ostrich has several hens, they all lay in the same nest. Of course all cannot be hatching at the same time, but they take turns, as anyhow the male always does with the female. And no hen can cover all those eggs from so many females. Only the central ones are being hatched, and those at the edges are later used as food for the chickens hatched. This occurs in nature with wild birds; of course not under domestication. Hatching takes six weeks.

How They are Fed.

A full-grown ostrich receives as daily ration ten pounds of green or five pounds of dry alfalfa chopped up; also one pound of corn, wheat, oats or barley. In winter by preference corn is given because it is more warming; and if it is desired to promote the laying of eggs, oats or wheat. Bones are also supplied, by preference fresh, cracked to the size of a marble or a walnut, for the sake of the phosphorus to promote feather growth, and the sulphur, to help form eggshell. Any amount of clear fresh running water is best. The rations of smaller birds are in proportion. Gravel is also supplied for the eggshell.

An extensive ostrich farm was of late years started near Phoenix, Ariz., by Mr. Stein, an ostrich feather manufacturer from New York City. He sold it soon after having started it, to Mr. Pearson, who then was connected with the Burbank Theater at Los Angeles, and who had just married a wealthy Arizona lady. Mr. Pearson died but his widow is continuing the business very successfully. There now are about eight hundred birds, of which Mr. Atherton in the course of three years has supplied about three hundred. Mrs. Pearson has experienced ostrich men from South Africa in her employment.

Market Prices for Birds.

The market for ostriches is irregular. Most sales are to showmen, or to people who want to start farms; but the latter are few. Here in California there are only the Atherton and the Cawston farms, and a small one at Norwalk. Mr. Brown at Arlington keeps for show half a dozen ostriches in a small paddock; but of course this cannot be dignified with the name of a farm. In Florida and in Tennessee there have been, and still are here and there small farms. The Phoenix farm of Mrs. Pearson is the most important. Mr. Cawston's South Pasadena feather factory may give quite an impetus to the business for which Califorrnia is even better adapted than South Africa itself.

A perfectly matched pair of full-grown ostriches, known as good breeders, has sold for as high as $500 and even $1000. Standard price for a fine full-grown male will be between $150 and $250. Young ostriches six months old fetch $30; six weeks old as low as $4.50. The feathers of a male bird are more glossy and brighter than those of the female; the latter are worth only one-half to two-thirds the price of the former. The first picking of a young bird may yield only half a pound of feathers, and some of those feathers will be worth perhaps only ten cents a pound, the best $3 to $4.

In case of very rainy weather a hen may refuse to hatch; in that case Mr. Atherton uses an incubator. At the Cape once two hens with one male laid eighty eggs, which in an incubator all hatched out successfully.

Ostriches here are remarkably healthy. If one dies Mr. Atherton holds an autopsy in order to discover the cause. A few years ago a good male died from no apparent cause; the autopsy showed that foxtail, probably in the alfalfa, had entered the brain. Several years ago three ostriches by night escaped over the high enclosure. One ran to the railroad and followed the track; a train overtook and crushed it. Another was recaptured. Of the third, strange to say, nothing was ever seen or heard.

Story of the Milling Industry.

HOW HARD WINTER WHEAT IS TURNED INTO THE MOST NUTRITIOUS OF FINE WHITE FLOURS.

[BY S. B. WASHBURN, IN TECHNICAL WORLD MAGAZINE.]

THE grinding or crushing of the wheat berry, in order to make it fit for baking, is one of the oldest industries. Modern flour milling, on the other hand, is a development of the last thirty-five years.

Hollowed rocks and other primitive grinding tools are found in the dwellings of the prehistoric stone age, and are still used by savages and semi-civilized peoples in various parts of the world. It has taken countless centuries to progress from them to the consecutive rollers of the present-day process, which makes possible the turning of hard spring wheat into a straight or standard patent white bread flour, rich in gluten, and including much that in the old process of milling was lost in middlings and bran.

How a Wheat Kernel is Made up.

A kernel of wheat consists of three distinct parts:

1. At one end the tiny germ, which develops into a plant.
2. The vastly larger portion, comprising 86 per cent. of the whole, which nature designs as food for the young plant during germination, and which is the only part that enters into our fine white flours.
3. The protective coverings, in several layers, called "bran," making up 9 per cent. of the kernel.

Under the process of milling in use until after the close of the last century, the wheat berry was ground in a set of stones with cut faces run not quite touching each other; and the fine flour was obtained by sifting the product through sieves of varying fineness. As fine grinding would reduce some of the hard outer coats of the berry to fine powder, thus making a dark flour, it was necessary, in making fine white flour, to use only the softest wheat, which would crush readily, without powdering the dark outer coats. Such wheat is starchy and contains relatively little protein. It was the use of this flour which made Liebig recommend a return to whole-wheat flour, and which gave the so-called "Graham" flour its great boom.

Roller Process Was Revolutionary.

The introduction of the roller process of milling from Hungary made it possible to use the hard spring wheat berry in the making of fine white flour. This berry is much richer in gluten than the softer variety; and the result is that standard white flours of the present day, made from hard wheat, carry more protein than almost any Graham flour on the market twenty-five years ago, and as much as or more than many such flours now in use.

As in so many other great industries, the United States stands first among the countries of the world in flour milling. The world's production of wheat for the year 1903 was 3,200,000,000 bushels. Of this total, the United States furnished 640,000,000 bushels, which is the equivalent of 104,000,000 barrels of flour, an allowance of more than one barrel per year per capita of population. Less than 18,000,000 barrels was exported.

Extent of the Industry.

There are in the United States 25,000 flour mills employing a total of 40,000 workmen, who earn a yearly wage of $17,000,000. First among the States as a flour producer stands Minnesota. This State has but 500 flour mills; but they are so far the largest of their kind that they produce more than one-fifth of all the flour ground in the United States.

Minneapolis is preëminently the "Flour City," though another—Rochester, N. Y.—earlier acquired the name. On either side of the Mississippi stand the great stone mills, the wheels of which are turned by power taken from St. Anthony's Falls. Five of these Minneapolis mills alone turned out almost 10,000,000 barrels of flour last year. The process of milling in all great modern plants is essentially the same.

All over the hard wheat belts of the Northwest, and far up into the Red River valley of the North, stand giant elevators, into which the wheat is gathered from the surrounding farms. To a considerable extent these elevators are owned and controlled by the large flour-milling corporations. From them it is conveyed directly to the mills.

How great is the consumption of wheat may be gathered from the fact that the mills of a single Minneapolis corporation grind 300 carloads every working day in the year.

At the mills the wheat is received in a large hopper, and weighed. It is then elevated by an endless chain of cups to the bins at the top of the building. From the bins it is conveyed to the "cleaning house," where it passes through a series of ingeniously contrived separators which extract the cockle, stub straw, mustard seed, oats, etc. The grain then goes on to the "scourers," where the fuzz and dirt are removed by attrition. The refuse is sold for chicken feed. Leaving the scourers the wheat passes through a cast-iron box containing countless revolving brushes, which dust the kernels as they drop through on their way to the subterranean storage bins below.

Milling Process Begins.

When the milling process proper begins, endless conveyors again take the wheat to the top of the mills, whence it starts on its downward journey through the many intricate machines situated on the different floors. The first of these crushes the kernels between chilled iron rolls—the preliminary step in the gradual reduction process. These machines are small and compact, and consist of grooved rollers revolving at unequal rates of speed, thus securing the effects of both crushing and cutting. This is the process which was imported from Hungary, and which revolutionized the flour industry. During the first reduction, the grain passes through six of these machines, the product from each one being conveyed to and through the separating reels, which consist of long, cylindrical boxes covered with bolting cloth. Here the "middlings" or "grits" are separated, the residue being sent to another set of rollers in which it is crushed more finely, then back to a finer sieve, this being repeated six times. As the rolls in each successive break are closer together and the sieves smaller, the middlings are naturally finer after each operation, thus causing six different grades in size and quality.

The middlings are then passed through the "middling purifier," the machine which permitted the use of spring wheat, and which might be termed the revolutionizer of the flour industry. This machine consists of a large box containing sloping frames covered with silk cloth and shaken by an eccentric. Underneath are brushers which work back and forth, thus preventing the meshes from being clogged by the flour passing through, a current of air at the same time taking up the fine bran and dust into a series of flannel tubes. This purifier was invented by one Joseph Perrigault, a Frenchman.

From the middling separators, the dust is shaken into a conveyor which takes it to a bolting reel, where a low-grade flour is obtained. The middlings themselves are not yet ready for the final reduction into flour, as they are of an oily nature and a yellow color. To eliminate these defects, they are passed through a series of smooth iron or porcelain rolls, which flatten the germs sufficiently to be sifted out by bolting reels, the extracted germs being mixed with bran to make feed for animals, while the now purified middlings are ready for the final grinding into flour. They are raised to the top floor and deposited in bins, each bin being designated for special grades.

When wanted, the flour to be is allowed to drop through chutes into the desired machines, one to seven additional reduction processes being necessary before the final grinding between stone wheels. At the end of this operation, it is again deposited in bins, on the second floor, ready to be placed in sacks and barrels. This work is performed on the next lower floor, sheet-iron tubes connecting the flour bins with the barrels or sacks.

Thus, from the moment the cars of wheat are unloaded by automatic grain shovels, the wheat, middlings, and finally the flour are elevated and conveyed in all directions from, to, and through one machine and another, and the finished product put into the proper sacks and barrels, without the direct intervention of man, the work being performed by most ingenious automatic machinery.

But to the modern miller even this is not sufficient. Samples of the flour are sent every hour to the experimental and testing departments, where a portion of it is placed in a glass bottle and is numbered to correspond with the number of the milling which is marked on the barrel or sack. The other portion is carefully weighed and made into bread, mixed and baked scientifically, the degree of heat of the oven being exactly ascertained. The baked loaves are then weighed and measured, and the texture of the grain examined, the results being marked upon the bottles containing the milling. These are saved for several years, thus permitting a test or examination at any time that such may be required.

HANDY MAN AT HOME.

Writing to the Technical World Magazine, a newly married woman tells a story of the useful man about the house:

I have been married only a month and I think that some of my housekeeping experiences may be of interest to your readers. My husband can do almost anything—he is really a very wonderful man. The other day I discovered that the bathtub needed a new coat of varnish. I told him, and he said he'd attend to it that night if I'd get the varnish. So he came home early and I told him the varnish was in the cupboard with the groceries. He took off his coat and applied the varnish, while I got dinner.

"Goodness," he said, as he tasted the soup, "this tastes just like a paint shop. That varnish odor gets into everything."

It tasted queer to me, too; but I felt my reputation was at stake and wouldn't admit it. After dinner we went to look at the bathtub. It was very queer-looking, and had curious lumps all over it.

"Where did you put the empty varnish can, George?" I asked him. I had certain suspicions.

"Out in the back yard," he answered.

I went out and found it later. The poor boy had actually varnished the bathtub with the ox-tail soup we should have had for dinner, and—yes, I suppose there's no doubt we ate the can of varnish. But I wouldn't let him know it for the world. He'd feel so chagrined.

Empire Ranch

Near Lemoore, Kings County

The Empire Ranch, along both banks of Kings River, comprises 19,000 acres of river bottom land as level as a table and as fertile as any that can be found in the world. It is one of the grandest agricultural sections of the West. We particularly recommend this land for

ALFALFA

Nowhere in this great State can you find such advantages for raising alfalfa as on the Empire Ranch. The conditions are ideal, climate, soil and an abundance of water uniting to that end. This deep, rich alluvial soil is especially adapted to its growth. In fact we are in the most successful alfalfa section in California. Kings county farmers are raising it and prospering. Dairying is becoming the most prominent industry in the San Joaquin Valley, for wherever alfalfa is best grown there dairying is the most profitable. Creameries are at hand. Money returns are quick and often.

Twenty Acres

or more at the phenomenally low price of $40 per acre. Easy terms. Perpetual water right with each acre and cannot be separated from it. Kings River water in abundance, for we have riparian water rights and also large interest in Lower Kings River canal. There are ten flowing artesian wells on Empire Ranch.

Artificial Creation of Life.

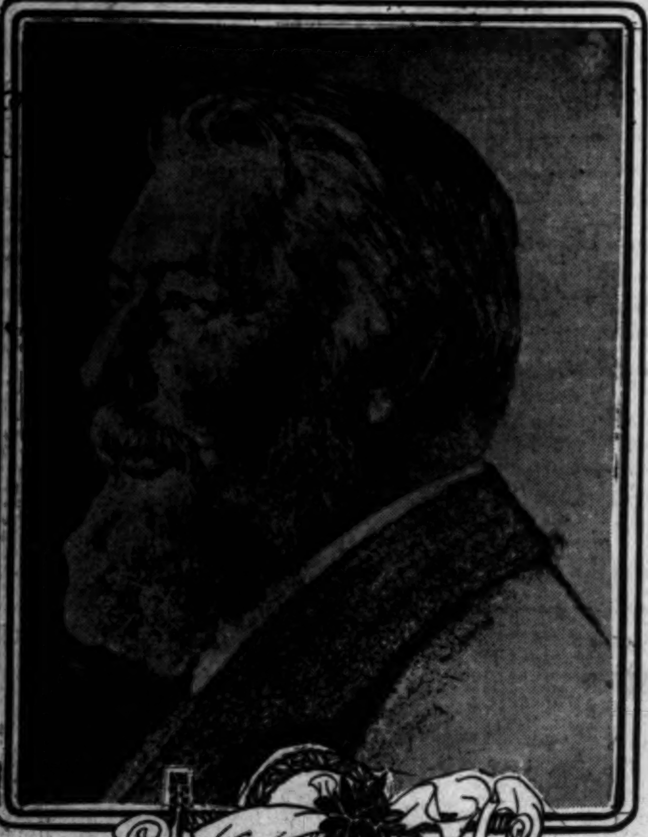
FAMOUS PROFESSOR SAYS THIS MARVELOUS ACHIEVEMENT IS AN ACCEPTED FACT AMONG SCIENTISTS — ARTIFICIAL ANIMAL CREATION WILL BE SLOW BUT SURE—WONDERFUL POSSIBILITIES BY SPECIALIZING AND DEVELOPING VARIOUS TYPES. ASTONISHING STORY OF THINGS ACCOMPLISHED AND ALSO PROMISED.

By Prof. Wilhelm Ostwald.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

Prof. Wilhelm Ostwald, who occupies the chair of physical chemistry at the University of Leipsic, is recognized as one of the foremost chemists, ablest students of biology and profoundest thinkers of modern times. He recently came to this country to deliver courses of lectures at Harvard and Columbia. His high scientific standing makes the following article all the more startling.

CAN man create life—that is, a moving, breathing, thinking embodiment of energy—artificially? Can, in other words, organic beings be created by inorganic processes? My answer is, yes. Greatly to my surprise my recent lectures on this subject, delivered at Harvard and Columbia Universities, have started the ball of controversy rolling at very pronounced speed. I say to my surprise, because it is now an accepted fact among scientists that the phenomena of creation is possible of performance by what may be termed artificial agencies. This stupendous achievement, recently credited to Prof. Loeb in the United States and more recently to Prof. Emil Fischer in Germany, has evidently not impressed itself upon the general public, despite its profound importance.



PROF. WILHELM OSTWALD.

While I will not go so far as prophesying just how soon the quasi-miracle will come to pass, there is now hardly any question but that in the course of a few generations at the outside—possibly within comparatively few years, possibly within a century, but sooner or later certainly—science will be creating a form of life as advanced as that of our domestic animals.

So far as my own researches and convictions go there is practically no limit to what may be accomplished in this direction. Had it been declared fifty years ago that messages would be sent for hundreds of miles by a wireless process no one would have taken the prediction seriously. No one would have believed ten years ago that within a decade a vehicle of locomotion would be built by which a human being could travel at the rate of two miles a minute and live to tell the tale. But it is hardly less credible that we or our great or greater grandchildren will hear of science performing the functions of a so-called creator.

One may go further and say that not only will actual creation by chemical or scientific processes be performed, but that man will undoubtedly be able to determine or change the form of creation at will.

For example, it has already been demonstrated that the presence or absence of light plays an important—a vital—part in the development of man as well as the lower animals and especially of plant life. No form of energy, we may say, is possible of prolonged existence a mile away from the sun. Again, it has been demonstrated that frog's legs do not develop and soon die when inclosed in a dark box, while normal development occurs in an open box exposed to the sun. Prof. Beclard recently discovered, in determining the solar influence on the development of the eggs and larvae of flies, that those placed under plain bell jars were far more developed after four days than those under violet and blue jars, and least under green ones. There is also the celebrated investigation of Gen. Pleasanton, who put three pigs into a stall with violet windows and three into a stall with ordinary windows. While the latter gained 398 pounds in four months the others gained only 386 pounds. From this observation Gen. Pleasanton concludes that violet light is unfavorable to the growth of these animals. His book, however, is blue-typed and gives an explanation of all natural phenomena from love to the activity of a volcano.

It is well known that animals, when light falls on them, move toward the source of light, like the moth, or move away from it, like the earthworm. It is also well known that certain plants have a tendency to turn toward or from the sun when illumined from one side only, and that at a constant intensity light acts as a continuous source of stimulation. So, by the proper manipulation of light, it will unquestionably be possible in the course of time to govern the shape or organs of animals, just as the shape of plants is governed by their attitude toward the sun.

Naturally the process of artificial animal creation will be slow. The important thing is that it will be sure. One form of life will be produced after another. Prof. Loeb has already created sea urchins by chemical agencies, and Prof. Fischer has created an even higher type in his remarkable experiments. Drawings made by the former convey some idea of the manner in which the eggs of sea urchins were artificially grown. All of these animals hatched out perfectly normal skeletons and intestines before dying. They lived more than two days.

But many persons are asking. Why create life artificially when the earth is teeming with life of natural creation?

This query is natural, though, perhaps, revealing immature thought. In the first place, we ourselves are the product of evolution and selection. Man was sown, but he has raised himself to his present state. His faculties are practically boundless; so boundless in scientific opinion that he will evolve in himself, will usurp, the functions of the Creator—the primary creative principle. He should even be able to recreate his own kind, a prophecy of which is contained in the Scriptural passage referring to man being born again.

Is this so unreasonable? No, although that stage of human scientific intelligence is, of course, very, very far away. Yet, having already created a protoplasm, such as the water hydra or the sea urchin semblance—forms of energy instinct with positive life—a firm foundation for the prophecy has been laid. And the higher evolution can only result in the creation of something equal to our higher animals.

What, it is again asked, will be the gain? If it were possible to create and endow our secondary animals with physical and mental functions more nearly corresponding to those which we ourselves possess, will not the result be of immeasurable gain?

Today the most valuable servant or employé is the one who has been long and carefully trained in special fields of labor. Why not, then, create forms or animal life capable of doing many of the things which only human beings can do today?

By specializing it may be possible, for instance, to create a type of animal capable of doing the heavy work of the world—creatures of vast physical strength coupled with a higher form of intelligence than has been evolved as yet in any animal excepting man. This, of course, is delving very far into future possibilities, but it indicates one of the immeasurable advantages which science is working toward in solving the problem of creation.

There is no question but that men are poorly constructed physically for doing many things which they now do perforce. By creating a form of animal with certain physical attributes, combined with the necessary intelligence, for scaling lofty heights, the advantage would certainly be pronounced.

On the same principle it would be advantageous to create a form of intelligent being better qualified to live and toil underground, and so on and so on down the scale.

It seems to me that the scientist, or rather the scientists, who contribute to this result will gradually be able to determine the physical form of the respective creations, once the development is fairly commenced. Step by step the regeneration will progress until man shall have created an entirely new or advanced order of life, for each creation will naturally multiply in its own form indefinitely, just as our modern animals do from man downward.

Naturally it will require generations on generations of analysis, selection and experiment to artificially evolve any form of life that shall measure up to such a standard as the one indicated. But progress leads to progress, success begets success, and from the present small beginning who shall say there is any limit to what science can accomplish? Hand in hand with the progress made in discovering and perfecting the creative principle, we may expect to master the riddle of death, so termed. Prof. Loeb and others have shown, along with their creative experiments, that the fertilization of the egg serves to prolong the life of the egg. Unless artificially fertilized the egg dies in a comparatively short time, by reason of which the egg becomes important in studying the question of natural death and the protraction of life. As yet, however, it has by no means been decided that there is any natural death.

We only know that with advanced age a critical period is reached when every living organism dies under the influence of conditions which do not affect a younger organism. That death, or natural dissolution is due to internal and not to external causes has been determined recently in a most extraordinary manner. Eggs of the starfish were used. Some of them were placed in eight flasks filled with sterilized sea water, while others were placed in flasks containing ordinary sea water contaminated with bacteria. Six hours after the experiment began the flasks were opened and the eggs examined microscopically. As many, if not more, mature dead eggs were in the sterilized flasks as in the contaminated. Twelve hours later the result was the same, proving indisputably that death was due to internal causes, the mature eggs having died before the bacteria could attack them in sufficient numbers to threaten their existence. At the same time the important discovery was made that each of the flasks contained a small number of living eggs which, without exception, were young ones.

My opinion based upon careful research and study, is that something is implanted in every form of life which in the course of time becomes enervated and poisonous, causing death. Science is now on the eve of discovering what this mysterious principle is, and when this discovery is made, the next step will be to ascertain a remedy or at least a counteractive. It would be hazardous to say whether this mysterious principle is material or otherwise, but as age comes on it is believed to sap and poison the vitality until dissolution sets in. The discovery of a counteractive in this connection will be the discovery of the only elixir possible, perhaps, for prolonging existence indefinitely.

Science has no doubt that the causes of natural death will be ascertained together with a means of so restoring the vital principle that not only the physical being but the spiritual may be revivified successfully.

Not being a biologist myself, but only a chemist with occasion to delve into biology in my chemical researches, I cannot say just how soon or successfully many of these promises will be fulfilled. But never in human history has science been so daring and confident as today. It is still on the lower slopes, but is far enough up to realize a boundless horizon of possibilities.

I cannot say whether its initial creations will be crustacean, amphibian, mammalian or whether biped, quadruped, fish, fowl or reptile. I can only say that after a very careful study and analysis of what has been accomplished I am overwhelmed by the inevitable probabilities.

As a chemist it is my absolute belief that by inorganic processes organic life of a higher order can be produced, and that future generations will be furnished with a living object lesson in the doctrine of evolution.

Science is still juvenile, but the torch it bears is already bright enough to reveal an astonishing story of things accomplished and promised. Some of the most important branches of chemistry only date back a brief generation, and yet what wonders have been unfolded! Bessemer, Edison, Roentgen, the Curies, Loeb, Fischer, Pasteur, Darwin, Huxley and others, especially in Germany, who are only less better known to the general public, are the great sorcerers of our time—the stepping-stones for those who are to come. What they have done others will perfect and eclipse. We cannot as yet fully explain the mystery of life, but, after all, a human being is nothing but a form of energy born of the sun—is only a matter of chemistry—and, as Hamlet ventured, there are more things in heaven and earth than were dreampt of in the Horatian philosophy.

it is not the Yerkes man or the Mizner crea- concerned with here. It is with the tall, matron who stumbled down the granite steps from the Westlake mansion, and the Yerkes woman, and many others of the same type in American life in the present day that we are concerned. Multitudes of men have been notoriously dishonest, corrupt, and bad in every way; and yet the civilization of their time has received no blight nor check in its advancement because of the low morals of masses of men at any given period of time. Antony had few of the virtues of the Hebrew Joseph. Caesar was ambitious as ever Satan was when he rebelled against high heaven. But so long as Rome had women like Cornelia, whose sons she called her jewels, like Fulvia, the wife of Antony, and like Calpurnia, the wife of Caesar, there remained more than a little strength and vitality in Roman civilization.

The morals of the men who came over in the Mayflower were stern, and there was something not entirely attractive about their manners in many ways; but the women who presided over the homes of these early adventurers on the rocky shores of New England were the source from which America drew a very large portion of its inspiration and its ability to do great things in war, in peaceful industries, in letters and in statesmanship. Priscilla may seem very prim, perhaps prudish, too retiring and shy for our notions in the twentieth century; but whenever matronhood represented by a Portia, a Fulvia, and a Calpurnia shall fall to the level of a Cleopatra, or the maidenhood of Priscilla shall be replaced by the hoydenish manners of a girl who needs only to don male attire and then be herself to thoroughly disguise her womanhood, the very foundations of society are in danger.

Progressive whist clubs and all the other organizations indulged in by the women of our day may be all well enough, and are all well enough when they are all well enough; but when the progressive whist party or the afternoon pink tea gathering sends a woman, whose outward appearance at least indicates the lady, tottering drunk down granite steps in the broad, open daylight to take a street car for her home which she cannot find, it is about time that the men of America took a hand, and not too gentle a hand, either, in these afternoon gatherings.

Cornelia's jewels were her children, the immortal Gracchi. Portia's makeup was of that stern, stoical stuff that enabled her to swallow fire when life became too hard a burden to carry. Lucretia and Virginia are models of womanhood the world will never cease to admire. Cordelia never played golf, and Desdemona never won the championship at anything like tennis, but the masculine heart will forever cling to the Cordelias and the Desdemonas of womanhood. The Cornelias who will prefer their boys to necklaces and their home fireside, with the duties centering there, to pink teas and progressive whists, are the women who will make men's hearts glad and men's homes happy, and they are the women whose children will do great things and make great names to glorify their families and their country.

How long has it been in America since a woman occupying the place of a lady, having the education and the manners of a lady, surrounded by home comforts and at the head of a family circle which her presence ought to grace, could stumble down granite steps in the open sunlight of the afternoon, in a state of degraded drunkenness, and not be forever an outcast from the society of her town? Old-fashioned persons among us will look into their experience and say that the time has not been long, and it is a pity and a shame that the same reprobation should not follow such disgraceful conduct today as it did twenty years ago.

The Constitution of the United States is a wonderful instrument. The Bill of Rights is a palladium of liberty. The Declaration of Independence, with the tables of stone that Moses brought down from the mountain and the sermon of the Savior delivered from the mountainside, are the three greatest productions of the human mind; but the Declaration of Independence with the other two great instruments are dead letters if the women of America can become notorious drunkards like the stately Los Angeles matron and degenerates like the Yerkes woman and her type.

EVENING.

The day is o'er, and eve has come,
  Soft fragrance fills the air;
But restless thoughts oppress my soul,
  My heart is full of care.

The golden sun sinks down to rest,
  And tints the western sky;
And through the silent air I hear
  The whip-poor-will's sad cry.

Soon night so softly veils the earth
  That no one hears her fly,
And one by one the stars peep out,
  The flowers of the sky.

The crescent moon rides silently,
  And sheds o'er earth her light;
And listening, I hear afar,
  The voices of the night.

And suddenly my heart grows light,
  Forgotten is all wrong;
My cares and sorrows fly away;
  My soul bursts out in song!

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

TRUTH AND LIBERTY.

THE little month of February is made big by the national celebration of two great birthdays, that of Lincoln, on the 12th, and that of George Washington on the 22nd.

No lofty monument of the sculptor's art erected to the illustrious American statesmen and patriots can pay higher tribute to their memory than the universal association of their respective names with the two great fundamental principles, Truth and Liberty, upon which rest equally the glory of nations and the welfare of individuals. It is a noble bequest to the youth of America, a rich inheritance from the "Father of our Country" that his name should be synonymous with Truth.

What though doubts arise as to the absolute veracity of George Washington the boy or the man—and why should some be at great pains to search the records of the past in order to prove the fallibility of the first President of the United States, and by their proofs establish his closer relationship in weakness and error to the generality of mankind, thus beclouding the light of one whom we have been pleased to regard as "Star of the Nation?" Is it not worth much to our boys and girls, the coming citizens of these magnificent united States, which through their power and influence are destined to play an important part in the history of the world—to have such an example for emulation; such an ideal to inspire a pure and exalted patriotism, to encourage a zeal for the nation's progress and success, manifested not merely in boisterous demonstrations, in wild hurrahs and rhetorical bombast, but in a zeal, an ardor for participation in the onward course of one's country that shall be evidenced in practical efforts to promote civic order, wise State and Federal legislation, and altogether just administration of national affairs?

Let us never cease to inspire the minds of the young with love, admiration and honest enthusiasm for this great, free country, with its corner-stone of Independence-Liberty, with its governmental structure of "equal rights and opportunities to all, and special privileges to none!"

Let who will doubt the proverbial veracity of him who is known even to the lisping tot in the kindergarten as George Washington "who never told a lie." We will cherish the ideal of truth as represented by the first leader of the American land of freedom, inasmuch as Truth and Liberty were the dominant notes of his character.

It is enough for us to dwell on the positive side of Washington as a man, a general and a Chief Executive of the nation. It is important for us to know that he was just and kind and good and true. "First in war and first in peace," earning his title to "the man who never told a lie" by his honesty, his faithful discharge of public duty, his loyalty as friend and patriot, his devotion to the cause of Liberty and his unswerving adherence to Truth.

What higher eulogy can be bestowed upon Lincoln than the homely but intensive phrase of "Honest Abe." This popular encomium has come to mean much more than honesty in its ordinary sense, implying as well his simplicity and directness of thought and speech, his open, fearless defense of high principles.

The condition of chattel slavery was abhorrent to a man with Lincoln's deep sense of personal freedom and broad humanity; hence his determined promulgation of idea of Liberty for all, irrespective of creed or color, as a proper basis for American institutions and a just provision of the Constitution of the United States. Lincoln's career was typically American, an eminent illustration of possibilities that may be realized by American youth through sheer force of personal effort. The great problems of life which he solved in private, subsequently enabled him to view steadily and to decide judiciously political questions that were presented to him in public. The rugged strength accumulated in hewing a brilliant though tragic career out of harsh and forbidding circumstances, later distinguished him as statesman and orator.

Snubbish college-bred men who came to mock the "lean and lanky" self-educated member of the bar were overwhelmed by the eloquence of his powerful and lucid addresses. The "rail splitter" from Kentucky, born of illiterate parents in the depths of poverty, with but a single school year marking his "formal education," proved to the chagrin of many fortune-favored contemporaries that he could "split hairs" in forensic debate, as well as rails for his father's fence.

If the true scholar is "the man thinking," then surely Lincoln was a true scholar, for he was first and foremost the man working and thinking; and the work of his hands added purpose and vigor to his thought indelibly impressed upon the minds of all true American citizens. In turn, splitter of rails, flatboat hand, clerk, shopkeeper, postmaster and surveyor, he was all of these, but first and last "the man thinking," until his indefatigable industry, his unremitting studies through long, wakeful nights, enabled him, in 1858, to appear as candidate for Senator; and in 1860, a genuine offspring of American liberty, Lincoln attained the pinnacle of national fame by becoming President of the United States.

A man of the people, he stood on the firm platform of "government of and for and by the people." It was this proclamation that caused him bitter enemies, yet he continued to voice his cherished conviction that sovereignty should be vested in the people, that the supreme authority of the State or nation should not be some of the people, but all of the people, which statement he reinforced in many telling forms, especially in his wise dictum: "You may fool some of the people all of the time, and all of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time."

Uncle Sam in Canada. By F. G. Carpenter.

THE BRITISH NORTHWEST.

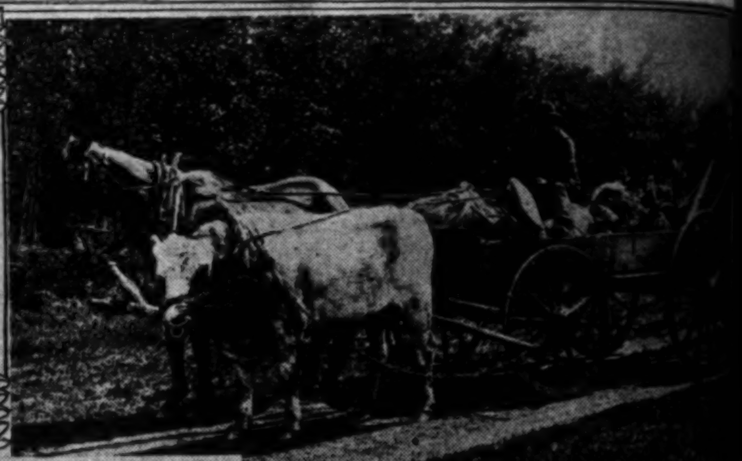
HOW OUR AMERICAN CITIZENS ARE BUYING IT UP.

From Our Own Correspondent.

WINNIPEG (Canada) January.—There are now more than 200,000 Americans in the Canadian northwest. They number one-third of the population, and some sections of the wheat belt are settled almost entirely by them. A few American syndicates have taken up large tracts, and some individuals have bought thousands of acres and are holding them, but the majority of our people have settled on the homesteads allotted by the government and, having bought lands adjoining, are waiting to grow up with the country.

Americans are doing a large share of the business of the new towns. A few are merchants, others are investing in elevators and mills, and there are a number at Winnipeg who have much to say in the grain exchange and other financial centers.

A train load of American settlers



En route to Saskatchewan

A fine looking woman drove up

Indeed, Canada may be said to have a real invasion of Americans. In 1896 less than fifty homesteads were allotted to them. In 1897 the number jumped to 1000, and in 1899 it was 26,000. In 1900 it rose to 35,000; and last year more than 50,000 Americans, an army ten times as large as that which Xenophon led on his march to the sea, came over into Canada and are now here besieging the God of Prosperity.

The government officials tell me they expect to have 80,000 more Americans this year, and I warn you that both they and the American real estate syndicates, who are making money out of buying lands and selling them again, will do what they can to increase that number in the future. This is a matter of vital interest to the United States. It means the loss of some of the best of our farming population, and in addition the actual carrying away into Canada of millions of dollars of good American gold.

Uncle Sam Will Lose $80,000,000 in 1906.

The most of the Americans who go to Canada are skilled farmers. They are men of means, and nearly all of them carry some money along. I am told that the average, so far, has been at least $1000 per head, which for the 200,000 immigrants who have so far gone there would mean an actual loss of something like $200,000,000. If the average is kept up it means that Uncle Sam will lose $80,000,000 from such emigration this year, and that to say nothing of the energy, brains and muscle of 80,000 good American citizens. It is generally estimated that a first-class man without a cent in his pocket is worth at least $1000 to the country in which he settles, and our emigrants are certainly worth that to Canada. They are worth more in the building up of this country, for they know just how to handle it. They are valued at something like $1,000,000 a year by the railroads as traffic producers. James J. Hill estimates that every new family which settles along the Great Northern is worth at least $100 a year in additional freight. Now 50,000 Americans at even five to the family means 10,000 families; and, at Mr. Hill's estimate this equals an annual increase of at least $1,000,000 to the receipts of the Canadian railroads.

Do you wonder that the Canadians are anxious to get us?

The Movement Started by Yankees.

This remarkable invasion originated in the combined forces of the Dominion government and Yankee speculators, and it has been carried on by those forces from the beginning until now. Indeed, I might say that our real estate men were the real discoverers of the new Canada. The Canucks have long known that they have a vast area of good soil, but they had no idea how it could be developed until the strenuous American crossed the boundary and planned out the way.

To begin with, the movement is the outcome of the filling up of the United States. For years the American railways, which are always figuring after possible traffic, have known that they were carrying about 300,000 emigrants to our great west every twelve months. This army has been scattered over our country, and it has rapidly filled the vacant spaces. It has eaten up most of the homesteads given free by our government and has swallowed about all the cheap lands that could be had in large blocks. About 1900 the fact that the most of such lands were gone became well known, and the American pioneer farmer who had settled in Ohio and there made money by selling out and buying cheaper lands in Illinois, and again made more by moving from there on to North Dakota, found himself at the end of such speculation. Lands everywhere had risen, and in the far west they were worth from $15 and upward per acre.

At the same time the big land operators, who had been buying large tracts in Minnesota and the Dakotas from the Northern Pacific and other railroads and selling them out to the farmers, found that there was no more land to buy; and that they would have to have new territory or quit the business. The farmers befan to wonder what kind of lands there were in Canada, and our real estate men to search far and wide for new worlds to conquer.

A Million Acres Sold by Americans.

Among these real estate agents were two who had made quick fortunes by buying our railroad lands and selling them. Their names were Robertson and Lynch. Robertson had started life as a country school teacher at $30 a month, and Lynch had begun as a land surveyor at a few dollars per tract. The two discussed the situation and Robertson was sent to Canada to spy out the land. He came here in the winter and took trips from Winnipeg out over the different railroads visiting the small towns of the wheat belt and of the new country beyond. He would stop at a village hotel, and engage in conversation with the farmers, asking as to their crops and the prospects. One man would tell him that he got twenty-seven bushels of wheat per acre that year, and on being asked as to the year previous, would reply that he had made twenty bushels then, but that the year before he had gotten only fifteen bushels, as his crop had been a failure.

As Robertson heard this kind of talk his eyes bulged out so that they almost dropped upon his cheeks. He saw the possibilities of land speculation, for he knew the average yield in Minnesota at that time was not more than fifteen bushels per acre. When he learned that the men held their farms at only about $10 per acre, he was still more excited. He heard the same stories at other villages, and when he returned to Winnipeg he called upon Mr. Griffin, the Canadian Pacific Railroad land commissioner, and told him that he wanted to buy 50,000 acres along the Soo Pacific, which comes into Canada from the United States and joins the Canadian Pacific trunk line a short distance above the boundary.

As the story goes, Mr. Griffin was not at all anxious to sell. I am told he looked upon Robertson as crazy, and advised him to purchase the lands through the local real estate agents. This was done, and it created such a sensation in Winnipeg that the agents employed by Robertson were accused of unmercifully skinning a poor American. At all events, the land was soon p

A short time after that, Robertson and Lynch came Canada and bought 1,000,000 acres of the Canadian cific Railroad grant, in the western part of am told, less than $3 per acre. That was four years and their land has all been sold. They have let the in all probability $2,000,000 out of the deal.

American Settlements in Canada.

During my travels here I have visited many of the localities where Americans have settled. They have come to Canada in all sorts of ways. Some were brought by the trainload, by the real estate agents and the government, almost depopulating the little farm communities of our country from whence they came. Iowa, for instance, has fallen off 10,000 or more through this and other emigration. Some of the settlers had crossed the boundary in canvas-covered wagons, and others had driven into Canada in all sorts of vehicles. I have photographs of men who came in using oxen and horses to pull their effects, and of some who plodded along for days, with ox teams, on the way.

The first Americans to arrive squatted down close to our boundary, getting homesteads and buying farms along the Soo Pacific Railroad. Soon afterward they began to take up the lands farther west, and now fully 70 per cent. of all the settlers between Moose Jaw and the international boundary are Americans. They own a line of wheat farms extending on each side from the railroad back far into the country. Their homes remind me of the settled portions of North Dakota, and they have many good little towns such as Weyburn, which has 1200, Milestone 600, and others. In such towns the business men are chiefly Americans.

Another line of American settlements has grown up along the Prince Albert branch of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and others along the Canadian Northern. It is on the Canadian Pacific branch that Davidson got his cheap lands and resold them. As it is now, there is a continuous line of unbroken wheat fields running from fifty miles above Regina to Rosthern, a distance of 170 miles. Ninety per cent. of the lands along that road are owned by Americans, their farms extending back from the track for about twelve miles on either side. Some of the farmers are homesteaders, many of whom bought the lands adjoining them, so that they each have all the way from 320 acres up to 5000 acres. They are building comfortable houses and good barns.

Don't Want Homesteads.

Some of the Americans will not take up homesteads, although they can get the land for living on it. They prefer to buy rather than relinquish their allegiance to the United States. Every homesteader has to become a naturalized Canadian before he can have a clear title to the free land. If he buys, however, he can get a title upon paying the money, and as the outsiders have about as many rights as the Canadian, with the single exception of being able to vote or run for office, a large number of our citizens are Americans still.

Within the past year the Canadian Northern has been pushed through the wheat belt to beyond Edmonton. There are Americans settled along that line, and it is probable that some of those who come this year will take up settlements between Edmonton and the Rockies, toward which the Canadian Northern is building. The latest colonies are along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and, indeed, there are Americans in every part of the New Canada. In another letter I will show the effect that this large American influence is likely to have upon the future of this great region.

Photographs by Wire.

INVENTION OF MEANS OF SENDING PICTURES ACROSS OCEAN.

By a Special Contributor.

"SEND me your picture by wire." This sort of message promises soon to become frequent, for the mechanism already exists by which this marvel can be accomplished.

A German professor has just demonstrated in tests that he can transmit excellent likenesses.

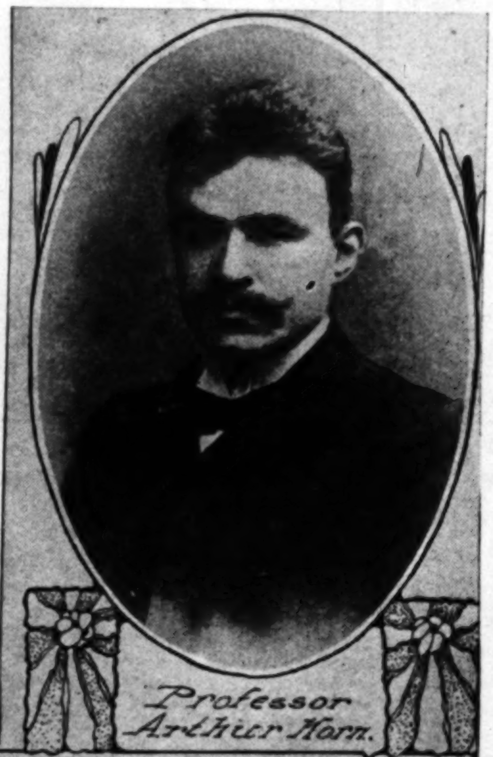
Supposing a murderer is caught. He is entirely unknown. No photograph of him exists. The newspapers hundreds of miles from the scene of the capture must wait until the mails can carry a picture, whose reproduction will interest thousands of readers.

Or take another case. The police are on the track of a fugitive from justice. They can do little till the mails bring them the photograph by which they can tell what sort of looking man they are after. But when the device invented by Prof. Alfred Korn of Munich is put into general use, presto! distance will be eliminated, and in less than an hour after a request has been sent over the wire, the newspaper editor or the police chief will have the picture he wishes on his desk.

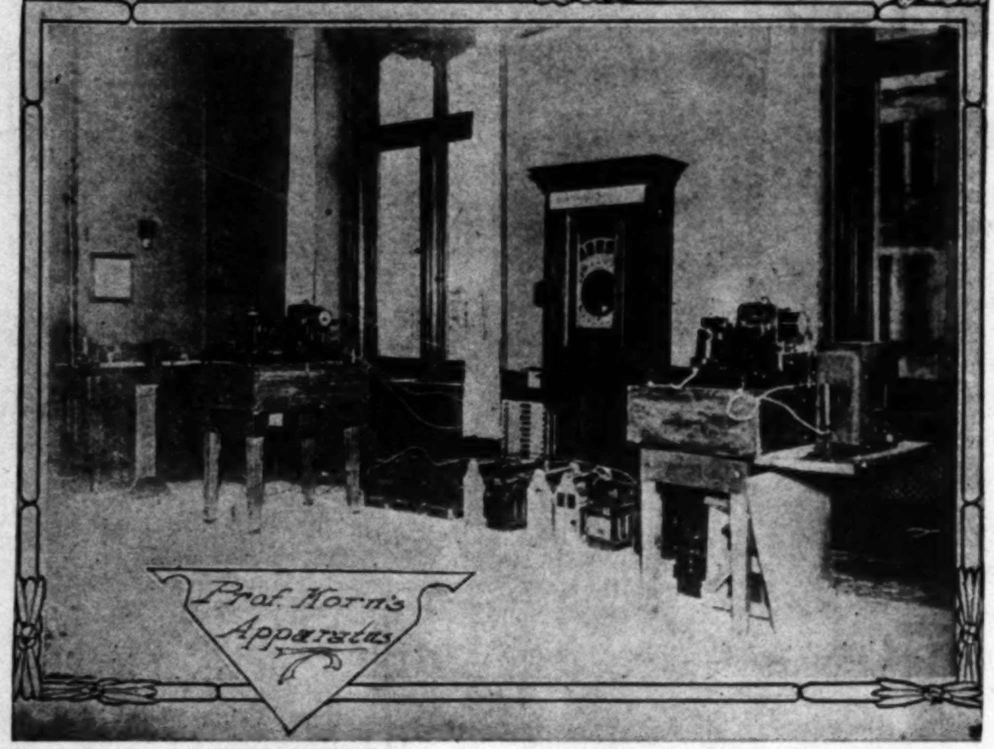
Prof. Korn has just announced the completion of his invention. He has sent excellent likenesses and facsimiles from Munich to Nuremberg, a distance of 100 miles. Now he says he can see in the near future a system that will cable them across the ocean just as readily as word messages are now sent.

The quality of the photograph is not affected in any way by the distance it must be sent, but the finer and more detailed the likeness the longer the time consumed in its transmission.

With the Nernst lamp and gas cylinder he uses, Prof. Korn, who holds the chair of applied physics in the great University of Munich, could telegraph a portrait from London to New York as easily as from London to Munich. The picture that arrived in the American metropolis would be just as good as that which went to Munich. Perhaps to be extra cautious, Prof. Korn might consume ten minutes more in transmitting the longer distance, not because of the increase in miles, but to be more careful in sending the current throbs. At the worst he promises a picture in New York, good enough for newspaper use thirty minutes after he begins sending it from London.



Professor Arthur Korn.



Prof. Korn's Apparatus

The chief point that Prof. Korn makes for his invention is that it is real photography, and not the transmission of line drawings. The latter have already been sent by wire. A few years ago prominent newspapers contained reproductions of line drawings that had been sent over the wire. But they were not satisfactory.

Sending photographs by wire is a very different proposition. This is based on the theory that light produced by the electric current may be made to vary in strength and intensity by a variation in the strength of the current. It is this idea that Prof. Korn has applied to his invention. The operation of using it is as complicated as many photographic processes, but just as these latter were gradually simplified to a point where they could be applied commercially, so there is no reason why Prof. Korn should not so handle his machine as to make it practicable for operation all over the world.

The photograph to be sent has first to be in hand in the shape of a negative, on transparent film, at the sending end. This film is placed on a transparent glass cylinder of proper dimensions, which is made to revolve slowly and also to move backward and forward throughout its length. A ray of light is thrown on this cylinder from the outside by means of an electric lamp and lens, and when this beam passes through the film it is stronger or weaker, according to the density of the negative.

Inside the cylinder is placed a piece of selenium, a metal which conducts the electric current, but whose conductivity varies with the amount of light which falls upon it; the stronger the light, the greater its conductivity.

From this it will be seen that any light made by a current passing through the selenium will vary in strength as the light thrown on the selenium varies.

The receiving end, therefore, is equipped with a lamp lighted by this varying current and placed inside of a glass cylinder of the same size and shape as that at the sending station, and movable in the same way. A sensitized film or paper is placed around this cylinder, and upon the proper operation of the device a positive is made upon the sensitized medium, which corresponds exactly with the negative on the cylinder at the sending station. This positive, indeed, is nothing more nor less than an ordinary photographic "print" from the negative.

It is essential, of course, that the two cylinders move at exactly the same rate of speed through the same distances, a matter which may be accomplished by the use of sufficiently delicate and accurate machinery. G. P.

RADIUM AND RABIES.

The great Italian institution of the Accademia de Lincei has just made an important announcement of Prof. Fizzoni's claim to have discovered an effective treatment by radium for rabies in dogs. The treatment takes the form of applying radium to the eye in mica tubes. The Accademia fully indorses the professor's claim, and cures were effected even in animals beginning to exhibit the symptoms which precede death. The Accademia adds that it is not the emanations, but radiation itself, which cures, more especially the cathode rays. The treatment also sets up a radio-active state of the brain, which greatly stimulates the healing process.—[London Globe.

A Strange Race. By Frederic J. Haskin.

THE PARSEES.

SOME OF THE PECULIARITIES OF A PECULIAR PEOPLE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BOMBAY.—In all of polyglot India there is no more unique class than the Parsees, who worship fire and abandon their dead to vultures. These people are the descendants of Persian refugees, and constitute the smallest and most compact race in existence. Their total number is estimated to be less than 100,000, and fully 85,000 of them reside in Bombay. Although more than a thousand years have elapsed since they were a or tillers of the soil. A Hindu or Mohammedan family of eight or ten persons will be content to live in a single room, but even the poorest Parsee would not allow himself to be crowded in this way. As a result of pure blood and careful living, their children are much heavier and hardier than those of any other race.

Foremost Race of Asia.

The Parsees, although few in number, are a proud people. They claim they are the progeny of a mighty race that ruled Persia centuries before the time of Christ. They say that the splendor and opulence of the reign of their ancestors was unequaled by any other nation of ancient times; the chastity of their women and the valor of their men making them easily the foremost race of The Symbol of Submission.

The Persians fled in all directions and suffered hardships by land and sea. For several centuries ants of it happened to locate in Bombay. It is that one of their number visited Delhi when it

Parsees was the result of that visit. Akbar promised protection if they would be submissive to him in self-governing people, during which time they have lived under the government of many creeds, including Hindus, Mohammedans and Christians, the Parsees have succeeded in preserving their religion and their personality. They have mixed freely with their neighbors at all times, readily adopting whatever would promote their commercial or political welfare, but have steadfastly refrained from intermarriage with other races, or from change in their domestic life.

The strength of Parsee character is shown by the fact that among all their women there is not a servant nor a prostitute. Of 10,000 beggars enumerated by the census in Bombay only six were Parsees—five men and one woman. Apology was made for these on the ground that they were cripples without kin. The men may be found in every profession and trade, but never in a position of servitude. Among them there are no day laborers, scavengers, barbers, laundrymen or grooms. Neither are they agriculturists or soldiers. Their instincts are purely commercial, the explanation being that they cannot maintain themselves upon the wages paid to menials Asia. This glorious era was brought to an end by an invasion of Mussulmans, the kingdom being shattered by the plundering of Arab bands, so numerous that successful resistance was impossible.

The old Parsee records tell of one odd incident in this struggle. A deputation from the victorious Arabs waited upon the Persian King and told him that in obedience to the commands of Allah the dominion of Islam was to be extended over all nations; that the Persians must adopt the Mohammedan faith and become religious brothers of their conquerors; the only alternative to this demand being to pay tribute or continue to fight. Although the ruler of the Persians was not in a position to continue the struggle, he scorned the proposition and planned what he considered a gross insult to his enemies. He caused a bag of earth to be brought, and, giving this to the Arab delegation, told them it was all the tribute they could expect from him. The Arab spokesman neatly turned this affront by carrying the sack of dirt to his general, and, throwing it down before him, style of a hoof as a symbol that they were under of their masters. This odd-shaped hat is still them.

There are many stories which demonstrate the struggle the Parsees have made to preserve their ion and the means to which they were sometimes to accomplish this end. On one occasion they proached by their masters and informed that they change their religion. Knowing that it would less to attempt to rebel against this verdict, the planned an artful scheme to avoid the persecution which they were threatened. They told the Go that they would be glad to adopt his religion, reality they had concluded to do so before manded it.

However, as a special favor they desired a grace in order that they might worship their for the last time and enjoy a period of rejoicing their conversion. This acquiescence was so to the Governor that he gave orders for no one the Parees in their ceremonies, no matter what they might take. A sumptuous feast was which all were invited, and after the wine had freely the Parsee colony, accompanied by its and dancers, marched about the city, and finally the gates and away. Before their ruse was they had placed a safe distance between them

Much attention has been attracted to the account of their towers of silence, or tombs for the tion of their dead. No one is allowed to their arrangement. Each circular tower is of drains. At the mouth of each drain there is a filter of charcoal and sandstone, which purifies the fluid before it enters the ground. This is in accordance with one of the tenets of the Zoroastian religion to the effect that mother earth must never be defiled. To the Christian, the mere thought of disposing of the dead in such a manner is harrowing. It is depressing to see the great vultures sitting solemnly on these silent towers waiting for their prey. But the Parsees make a plausible defense of the practice.

They concede that cremation would be preferable, but it is contrary to their religious belief to pollute fire with anything so unclean as a corpse. They assert that the decaying particles of our bodies should be disposed of as rapidly as possible, and in such a manner that neither mother earth nor any of the beings which she supports shall be contaminated in the slightest degree. They explain that the founders of the custom, by placing their towers on high hills above all human habitation, and by providing such excellent filters, adhered so strictly to sanitary laws that even modern experts can find no fault with the plan. The corpses are exposed, not especially to be consumed by vultures, but to be quickly disposed of without polluting the earth or injuring any living thing dwelling on it. That the birds of prey expedite the destruction is better than to have millions of insects accomplish it as they do when bodies are placed in the ground.

The Parsee marriage is a picturesque affair and the stranger in Bombay is always attracted by the showy spectacle. While they do not countenance the marriage of children, according to the Hindu custom, the betrothals are often arranged when the principals are still children two or three years of age. In some instances marriages are even covenanted before the children are born. The details of the betrothal are always made by a priest, and the wedding generally takes place immediately after the girl has arrived at the age of puberty. The ceremony invariably takes place in the evening, and for the reason that certain days in the year are considered auspicious, a great many marriages may occur at the same time. The occasion calls for processions, bands, a profuse display of flowers, and a lavish exchange of gifts. The numerous guests always attire themselves in their richest apparel.

The form of the ceremony is unusual. The bride and groom sit opposite each other with a cloth curtain between them. Under this screen they clasp right hands. The officiating priest then proceeds to encircle them with a piece of cloth, the ends of which are tied in a double knot. In addition to this a raw twist is wound around them seven times, then tied in seven knots over their joined hands. After this the curtain is suddenly dropped and the bride and groom throw rice. It is supposed that the one who first succeeds in hitting the other is the most in love, and great interest is always evinced in this test. The ceremony is concluded by the recital of blessings.

The formalities observed when death occurs are also notable. A dying man is washed and dressed as prayers are said over him. When life is extinct the body is wrapped in cloth and deposited on a stone slab on the floor. Before the recitation of the funeral sermon, which is an oration on the transitory life of this world, the face of the corpse is exposed to the gaze of a dog. This is done because the animal is supposed to be able to guide the soul of the deceased in the direction of heaven and afford protection during the journey. It is also believed that the eyes of a dog have peculiar magnetic powers in destroying certain impurities which surround a corpse, and that a dead body should never be touched by man until a canine has looked upon it.

It is further believed that the soul does not leave the world for three days; consequently a body is watched over by friends and relatives during that time, the final disposition of it occurring on the fourth day. The female relatives of the deceased person continue to sit for eight or ten days on a carpet spread upon the floor near the spot where the corpse rested before it was taken away. During this time they receive visits of condolence from relatives and close acquaintances.

The Parsees have many customs to distinguish them from the other inhabitants of India. The men do not smoke, because it is forbidden in their religion to bring fire in contact with anything which is impure. Their love of light is shown by the manner in which they illuminate their houses with various kinds of brilliant lamps and elaborate chandeliers. The fire on the altar of their temple is never allowed to go out; they claim that it has been carried with them on all their pilgrimages, and that it has been burning constantly for hundreds of years. They believe that it took a year to create the world; that the task was completed at six unequal intervals, each marked by a day of rest. All of these supposed periods are observed by fasting and prayer. Before a child is born the mother passes through the rooms of her house with a lighted candle in one hand and a cup of water in the other, the object of this strange proceeding being to insure that her offspring may always have light and never want for water. The members of this alien race have many good qualities which are recognized. They are adepts at trade and many of them have become rich. One of their most pronounced attributes is generosity, no people in India being more liberal in their benefactions. Queen Victoria knighted one of them for the many acts of charity which he performed without discrimination as to color, caste or creed. They have a free press and show great interest in all public works. The floral fountain in Bombay is the gift of a Parsee, and the beautiful Victoria Gardens were largely subscribed to by prominent men of this city. On the whole, India fared well when she attracted this strange clan of refugees to her shores, for her population numbers no more substantial citizens than they have proved to be.

Martha Washington.

WASHINGTON HOME LIFE—"TABLE TALK" OF GREATNESS.

By a Special Contributor.

A BIRTHDAY is essentially a home festival—the bright little family customs, the twinkling of candles of the birthday cake—and for the 22nd of February there can be no more appropriate theme than the every-day life of the sweet, winsome woman who was the queen of George Washington's home and heart.

Martha Dandridge made her début in the polite society of Williamsburg, the gay capital of gay Virginia, at the kindergarten age of 15, her child beauty—she was small, with light brown hair and hazel eyes—in quaint contrast to the dignity and maturity of character gained by being the thoughtful eldest daughter in a large family and the grace of manner that had come to her from birth and environment.

Her intellectual training had been small—bless her innocent heart, her spelling was weirdly original all her distinguished days!—but her natural intelligence was keen, logical, remarkably independent for a woman of her generation. She could do "cross, tent, satin stitch; hem, fell and overseam," and if any absurd mortal demanded more, let him watch her dance or listen to her play her spinnet!

Fate was kind to the indiscriminating maiden mind of sixteen summers. Her choice, Daniel Parke Custis, many years her senior, proved a most acceptable husband.

In the White House, on the York River, she lived happily—save for the mother's trial of burying two of her four children—until left a widow at the age of 25.

During her eighteen months of grief and seclusion her real capability was evinced by her personal management of her large estates—superintending her superintendents. Then, while visiting at a friend's house, Martha Custis met George Washington. She was still young; she was fair, and—a widow. It was love at first sight with the gentleman, and as far as the lady was concerned, who could blame her for recognizing her mate in the handsome, gallant, stately young captain?

They saw each other only once again before their marriage, but love flashes intimate knowledge, and an ardent correspondence bridged all strangeness, unfamiliarity, that might have existed between them.

The wedding took place at the bride's home—the Virginian White House—after which the executive mansion at Washington was named in honor of the first President's wife who would have graced it in so incomparable a manner had not the early seat of government been elsewhere. Like a beautiful tableau vivant stands out the picture of the bridal couple before the admiring eyes of our imagination.

"The bride wore white satin threaded with silver over a quilted petticoat, pearls entwined in her soft, brown hair. Her little feet, in high-heeled slippers, twinkled with brilliants. Point-lace ruffles fell about plump, tapering arms, and bosom, and, adorned with bracelets and necklace of pearls she looked tiny beside the tall bridegroom, in his costume of blue lined with red silk, embroidered white satin waistcoat, gold knee and shoe buckles."

On account of the Virginia captain's political duties at the capital, the honeymoon was spent either in the White House or at the Six-Chimney House, in Williamsburg itself, but immediately after, the happy family life began at Mt. Vernon.

No modern strenuous haste wore out the nerve and brain of those Mt. Vernon days, neither did the idle minutes twirl their thumbs. Besides the emergency calls of his military career and the regular and irregular political demands upon his time, Washington had the constant duty of farming 4000 acres, and with his passion for detail and taking pains, this meant no idle task.

"Mrs. Washington, her keys proudly jingling at her waist, looked well to the ways of her household"—intricate ways in the Virginia days of many slaves and much hospitality. Rising early, she gave many of her orders before breakfast, spent the first hour after that meal at private devotions, and the rest of the day gardening, sewing, embroidering, attending to her children, and ministering to the sick and needy among her "people," as the Washingtons called their 200 slaves.

At home, the little lady dressed plainly, but when she rode forth in public the splendor of her furbelows was in keeping with the pomp of the chariot and four, with its darky postilions in white and scarlet livery, and it does our feminine hearts good to read the order that Washington sent to his London agent in his wife's behalf.

"A salmon-colored tabby velvet of the enclosed pattern, with satin flowers, to be made in a sack or coat, ruffles to be made of Brussels lace, or Point, proper to be worn with the above negligee; to cost £20; 2 pairs of white silk hose; 1 pair white satin shoes of the smallest fives; 1 fashionable hat or bonnet; 6 pairs woman's best kid gloves; 6 pairs mitts; 1 doz. breast knots; 1 doz. most fashionable cambric handkerchiefs; 6 pounds perfumed powder; a puckered petticoat of fashionable color; a silver tabby velvet petticoat; handsome breast flowers; sugar candy, etc."

In 1773 Patsy, the sunshine of the house, died after a lingering decline. The end at last came suddenly, and her stepfather, hastily summoned from Williamsburg, knelt by her bed, still praying for the boon of the sweet girl life, unconscious that the gentle spirit had already slipped through the detaining fingers of an earthly love.

The following year Jacky, a hot-headed and impulsive-hearted youngster, married—his choice acceptable, but the marriage was two years earlier than his mother and her husband deemed prudent. Washington attended the wedding, but the mother was still homebound in grief over Patsy's loss, although she wrote the bride the following tender letter:

"My Dear Nelly: God took from Me a Daughter when June Roses were blooming—He has now given me another daughter about her age when Winter winds are blowing to warm my Heart again. I am as Happy as One so afflicted and so Blest can be. Pray receive my Benediction and a wish that you may long live the Loving Wife of my happy son and a loving Daughter of Your Affectionate Mother,
"M. WASHINGTON."

Meanwhile, the war cloud was swiftly gathering, the mutterings of indignation against British tyranny growing louder, nearer. The gentle, domestic Martha tingled with patriotism to her finger tips. Homespun cloth took the place of foreign finery, sixteen spinning wheels whirling independence and defiance at Mt. Vernon, the mistress exhibiting with special pride the material for two dresses, the stripes of which were made of ravelings from brown silk stockings and red damask chair coverings. And at last when that historic convention met at Philadelphia and one of the delegates bade her good-by, fire flashed through her veins and her parting words were: "I hope you will all stand firm—I know George will."

During the days of the Revolution, times that not only tried men's souls, but women's hearts as well, Mrs. Washington spent many lonely weeks at Mt. Vernon with great fortitude, but whenever possible she joined the commander-in-chief at headquarters.

She "acquired an inveterate habit of knitting," an army stocking even dangling from her swift needles, while she was a leading spirit in the sewing bees, the unorganized precursors of the Red Cross Society. But she did not confine her charity to doling out garments. She gave herself as well, personally ministering to the sick soldiers' physical necessities and to the dying ones' spiritual needs. The "boys" with reverent affection called her "Lady" Washington.

In 1789, the national government was in New York, a city without sewers and where all the water used in the houses was hawked about the streets from the one town pump.

At the "Executive Mansion," a three-story brick, with small-paned windows and a heavy brass knocker on the door, the President held levees Tuesdays and Fridays, while sometimes the wives of the distinguished callers ran upstairs for a dish of gossip with the President's wife. Formal state dinners with from ten to twenty guests took place at 4 o'clock Thursdays. Friday evenings, Mrs. Washington had her drawing-room, her husband with neither sword at belt nor hat in hand, standing beside her. Ladies attended by gentlemen, entered, "curtsied low" and sat down. After all the guests had come, the President walked about and "conversed." Plum cake, tea and coffee were served. At 9 o'clock Mrs. Washington rose and dismissed her guests as though they were little children too long lingering at a party. "The General"—was the naive formula—"always retires at 9, and I usually precede him." The whole affair was stupendously ceremonious—and deadly dull. Once only did the room thrill with excitement. Miss McIver's head dress "monstrous tall" caught fire from the candles in the chandelier. Alas! it was put out quietly and quickly.

A little visit to Mt. Vernon was squeezed in between the New York residence and the new executive abode in Philadelphia. On their way home from New York they had an "adventuresome" drive in a coach-and-six over miserable roads, the coachman, probably drunk, almost upsetting them.

In Philadelphia they set up their establishment in the house of the great financier Robert Morris. The most important personage of this household—totally eclipsing the President and his wife—was Uncle Harkless, "enormous" in size, ebon in hue. Uncle Harkless presided as chief cook over a kitchen where you "could smell the cleanness." In making ready for a state dinner he wore in turn half a dozen aprons and threw aside countless "soiled" napkins. The feast prepared, he left it to "menials" to serve; donned black small clothes, a blue cloth coat with velvet collar and metal buttons, silk stockings, a cocked hat and dangling watch chain; and left the house swinging a gold-headed cane, to saunter pompously down Market street, then called High street.

The Hessian John who drove the President's coach paled into insignificance beside Harkless, but was his equal as far as stickling for cleanliness was concerned.

The duties of a second term of the Presidential office faithfully performed, Washington and his wife joyfully turned their faces from public ceremonies to private life at the beloved Mt. Vernon.

"I am again fairly settled down to the pleasant duties of an old-fashioned Virginia housekeeper," wrote Mrs. Washington to a friend—"steady as a clock, busy as a bee, and cheerful as a cricket."

But the happy, busy days were all too soon to end. In December, 1799, Washington, riding for home in the falling snow, took cold from exposure. The cold grew serious with alarming rapidity, and to meet the emergency, instead of modern skillful methods, recourse was had to the old-time bloodletting at the critical moment when the patient needed all his strength to combat the strain upon his system.

Martha Washington received the blow of his sudden death with the Christian resignation of the old religious school. But the still waters of her soul ran deep with grief.

It was a morbid custom of the times to close for two years the chamber entered by death. The widow chose for herself a small, cheerless attic room whose window looked out upon Washington's resting place. Here she loved to sit; her fingers at work, her mind gathering together sweet memories of the past, flowers of thought laid upon her dear one's grave.

And Divine Love was kind. A call to come even nearer than the watching window of the attic room soon came to the waiting wife. In a little over two years Martha Washington lay beside her husband.

A SURVEY OF THE OPPORTUNITIES FOR SETTLERS.

From a Special Correspondent.

BUENOS AIRES, January, 1906.—There are numerous small rivers flowing to the sea all along the coast of South America, and most of them are named Magdalena. This seems strange to you at first, but after you have crossed a historic bridge over one Magdalena, sat up all night in the malarial swamps of another Magdalena to shoot crocodiles that never appeared, and bathed and boated respectively in two other Magdalenas, you get over your consternation and begin to call all rivers Magdalena, just as you call all Chinamen John in California, or all elderly gentlemen Colonel in Kentucky. And you are usually right about the river, whereas you are always sure to fire wide in time with your John and Colonel and hurt somebody's feelings.

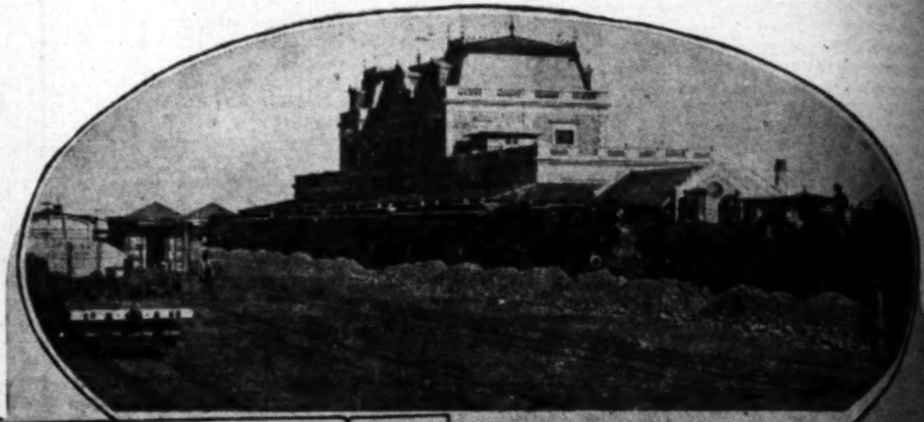
Of a friendly priest with whom I shared my stateroom from Santos to Montevideo I asked the reason for the surprising popularity of this name for rivers, and why applied to rivers, as it appeared to me, almost exclusively. He told me something very pretty, in allegory, I believe it is called, of how the beautiful purity of the rivers in their earlier courses, their subsequent muddiness consequent of unclean surroundings, and their complete rehabilitation of purity, and attainment to rest and peace eternal in the bosom of the infinite deep, had suggested to the poetic imagination of the Spanish-American a parallel to a like succession of events in the life of the sainted Magdalena of blessed memory.

This explanation does very well for one who has not come in contact with the South American—and I have the Brazilian particularly in mind—but to another it sounds, to say the least, unconvincing. Doubtless the South American is cheered to have a perpetual reminder near him of this clarification of the muddiness in the stream of his earthly career after it has run its course, for he seems to do very little to prevent the accumulation of mud as it flows. Possibly his countless churches act in the nature of settling basins to precipitate the heaviest of the muck from day to day, but he always carries a quantity in solution across the bar with him that defies the action of any reagent known to man to bring down. These sainted names that he applied to his cities and rivers and mountains, when not intended to act as bolsters to prop up a faltering courage, like the Rios Magdalena, are merely honorary symbols of propitiation bestowed on the off chance that they may sometime react in favor of those who originated and perpetuated them. The ubiquity of these names in South America does not, as one writer has stated, denote the existence of a "powerful current of religious fervor that constitutes the ruling passion of the people." If the people's ruling passions had been considered in their geographical nomenclature their continental map would have been besprinkled with Rio Cohechos, Sierra del Riña de Gallos, and Lago Loterias*, together with a number of other names that would not have looked well even on a map.

The Rio Plate is one of the few rivers that escaped when the rest of the drainage system of South America was being named Magdalena. It is the widest river in the world, and is second only to its sister, the Amazon, in the amount of water it discharges. Its main branch, the Parana, has a length of over 3000 miles, and provides the only trade route available for all of Paraguay and parts of Brazil, Uruguay and Argentina. The tremendous development in the last two decades of the countries drained by its tributaries, notably Argentina, has made it the waterway for so great an amount of shipping that it has easily wrested from the great Brazilian river the title of "The Gateway of South America."

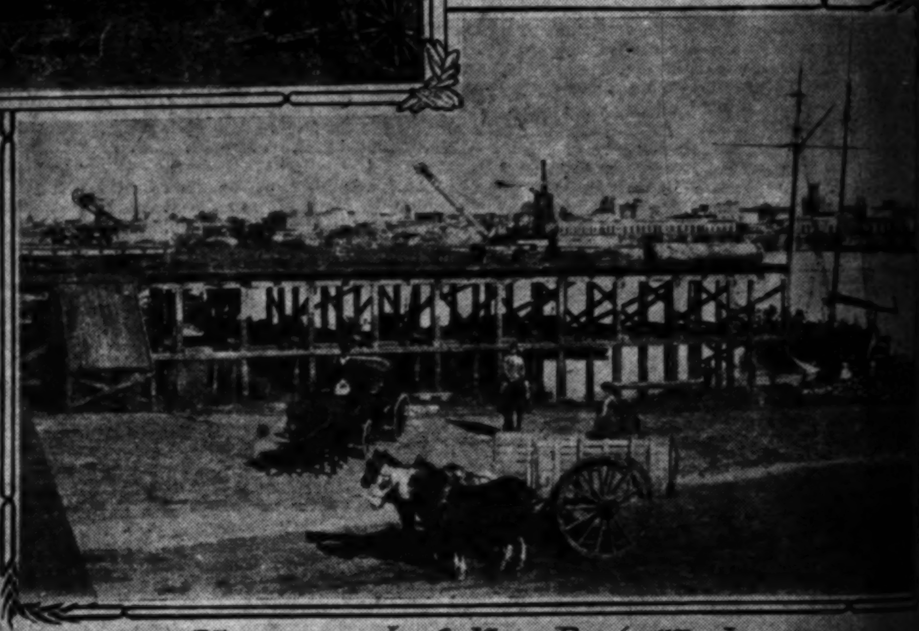
Montevideo, the capital of Uruguay, held during most of the last century the position of premier port of the Plate, but rather through its convenience as a port of call for vessels bound from Europe or North America around the Horn, than through any great amount of trade that emanated from Uruguay itself. It also gained importance as the trans-shipping point of cargo from the river boats to those bound over seas, its position in that particular being comparable to that of Hongkong, in the latter's relation to Pearl River trade from the southern provinces of China. But the first furrow turned upon the fertile plains of Argentina marked the beginning of the end of Montevideo's supremacy. While hundreds of leagues of wheat, maize and alfalfa have been added every year to Argentina's producing area, Uruguay has frittered away her energy and wealth in an endless series of petty political struggles, and in the swift progress the former country is making toward the goal upon which it has fixed her unaltering ambition, that of becoming the "granary of the world," Montevideo has trailed but lamely in the rear of the triumphal procession of Buenos Aires.

Many causes are assigned to account for the backwardness of development in Uruguay, and particularly agricultural development, through which must always lie the road to her greatest possibilities. Thus a Montevideo paper epitomizes, though somewhat abstrusely:



American built train on Central Uruguay Railway

Frozen carcass Vans in Yard of Freezing Works



Shore end of New Port Works

"The more important and permanent factors in the restriction of consumption, commerce and general prosperity is to be found, as we have constantly had occasion to say, in the oppressive and obstructive fiscal system of excessive and ill-adjusted duties and taxes, and the unrelaxing tendency to excessive 'officialism' in every branch of economic activity." An analysis of these and a dozen other reasons advanced by as many business men to account for the same troubles, shows that they all trace back to the fact that the only feature in common possessed by the numerous governments that in the past have changed with the frequency, if not the regularity, of the changes of the moon, is that of corruption.

The revolutions have been the particular bêtes noires of the agriculturists. A foreigner, or native of the country, for that matter, investing capital in land, stock and machinery, has always been obsessed with the feeling that if this month's revolt did not wipe him out, that of next month would not prove so false to its traditions. The title to land is rarely lost in a Uruguayan revolution, and crops only occasionally; but horses are always rounded up at the beginning of the outbreak with little fear or favor, and usually considerably less favor than fear. Stock thus requisitioned for the "exigencies of the service" is always a total loss, and one that entails, also, that of any crops that may be dependent upon [illegible] for harvesting.

As regards land available for the raising of [illegible] agricultural potentiality it might be called, Uruguay [illegible] second only to Argentina among South American [illegible] tries. In the quality of her farming lands, in their [illegible] ductivity, Uruguay need ask odds of no country, [illegible] the fact that her possible producing area is much [illegible] than that of her big sister across the river, is partly [illegible] set, it lying in much greater proximity to [illegible] Uruguay's ultimate position in the front rank of the world's great food-producing nations is an [illegible] certainty, an enviable place that not even the fact that she may have to thread for some time, yet the [illegible] political complexity sown in her troubled past can [illegible] her occupying at no inconceivably remote date.

To the immigrant from North America—and the Plate is the only country in the world, with the [illegible] exception of Canada, worthy of attracting any [illegible] ment from the United States—Uruguay at first [illegible] might seem to offer better opportunities than Arg The topography of the farming secaions of the presents to the eye an appearance less monotonous more generally attractive than do the rich but [illegible] ingly level plains of Argentina, while land equal to latter country's best at one-half and one-third the is an inducement not to be despised. To offset Argentina has to offer the security of a stable ment, equitable laws enforced with a rigidity elsewhere in South America, and the protection of efficient army and navy.

To many Argentina's advantages will not seem mensurate with the premium at which they and such, making the step with their eyes open, cannot do better than to cast their lot with Uruguay is a gambler's chance, and the ones who take stand to win far higher stakes with the same than would be possible in Argentina. There will be the risk for some years yet of serious setbacks revolutions, but those most conversant with the tion compare Uruguay of today with Argentina and three decades ago, and point to the fact estancieros who took their chances then are who now write seven-figure checks without ripple of excitement in Buenos Ayres baking

In a fortnight or so I will devote a letter to the subject of the opportunities of the North American in the countries in question, and then, from time to time, endeavor to point out more in detail what, and for whom, inducements offer in the various sections.

The increase of foreign capital invested in Uruguay, gradual at first, but latterly quite rapid, has supplied the balance wheel that has been needed in national affairs, and brought promise of a speedy improvement of matters all along the line. No one element has been of so much moment in the political, industrial and social rise of Argentina as the investment in that country of some hundreds of millions of pounds of good British gold, and the presence and example of the 40,000, or more, British subjects who followed the money to see that a proper proportion of it went back to London in the form of dividends, instead of to Paris and Madrid in the form of pickings. German money and subjects have exerted a like influence, but to a lesser degree. The same forces and factors are becoming increasingly operative in Uruguay to steady and improve financial and political conditions, and the opening years of the present century have witnessed a very appreciable clearing of the murkiness that has heretofore made it unsafe for foreign capital to navigate without the company of a gunboat.

Up to the last year or two the export trade of Uruguay has been little more than a careless sale in the nearest markets of the crudest of pastoral products: tallow, horns, hides, wool and beef, dried and on the hoof. The latter was exported to England until, in 1901, extensive epidemics of disease in the Platte herds compelled the closure of the British ports to South American live stock. About the same time the market Uruguay had found for over a century in Brazil, Cuba and Porto Rico for her principal product, tasajo, or "dried beef"—"jerky" it is called in the States—began to give unsatisfactory returns. These momentarily disconcerting setbacks proved disguised blessings, for the stoppage of both of the only beef markets practically forced the erection of freezing works in Montevideo as an alternative to giving up the trade entirely. The result has been that a new and prosperous industry has sprung up, while the old markets have been retained and extended through being supplied with a highly-improved and more nutritious product. As the carcasses, only, are exported, a considerable saving in freight is effected, while all the by-products are retained for transformation into articles of future exportation. There is still a demand for tasajo in the interior of Brazil, but the large cities on the coast of that country are now all supplied with frozen meat, and almost entirely from the Uruguayan "freezers."

These Rio Plate frigorific works, the nuclei of what must inevitably become the greatest of their kind in the world, are even now in size, output, equipment and management worthy to rank with the best of their kind in New Zealand, Australia and North America. The first year or two of their existence was precarious in the extreme, due largely to the ordinary handicaps of incipient enterprise, but since 1902, after making deductions for deterioration of property, for reserve and contingency funds and for the remuneration of directors, they have distributed dividends of from 40 to 70 per cent.

River Plate beef but a few years ago was the lowest-priced in the London markets. This is directly traceable to the old-fashioned method of freezing at first employed in Montevideo, by which the carcass was congealed at an extremely low temperature, dumped with many others into the hold of a steamer and permitted to slowly thaw as it approached its destination. To state the case more accurately, nothing was done to prevent its thawing en route, which fortuitous action entailed the trimming off of all the parts that had succumbed to the tropical heat and lost their frost. The meat that was not thus lost was of inferior quality and deteriorated rapidly on being artificially thawed for marketing. The substitution of the "chilling" process for the old "freezing" method, and the employment of refrigerated chambers for the meat in transit, has brought Rio Plate beef almost on a par with that of Chicago in the London market, and the mutton close up to that of New Zealand.

Low meat and high rates have been the most important factors in locating large extract of beef factories in Montevideo, and though the industry is barely five years old, that city now supplies 60 per cent. of the European demand for that product. The work of the factories in Uruguay is principally confined to the slaughtering of the cattle and reducing the juices of the meat to a crude form of extract, in which shape it is shipped to London in barrels. There it is turned over to the big local factories, where it is elaborated, put up in jars or bottles, and marketed.

The rapid increase of the consumption of meat extracts in England and the continent insures a good future for the industry which has adopted Uruguay for its home. Its prosperity and extension is of particular importance to that country, in that it allows her to get rid of the meat of the criolla, or ungraded element in her herds, which would otherwise find but a poor market.

Since 1892 Uruguay has taken three important steps toward aligning herself with Argentina in the front rank of progress. The first was in the form of bills passed in that year to encourage railway development; the second was the decree providing for the construction of modern port works at Montevideo, in 1901; and the third the enlistment of foreign capital to install an up-to-date system of electric railways in and about Montevideo, which work was inaugurated this year.

The railway bills provided ample insurance against destruction of property and other losses through political disturbances, and also guaranteed to make good the balance needed to pay a certain specified interest on the capital invested. The latter provision cost the government an average of $800,000 a year up to 1902, from which time it has rapidly decreased. This year (1905) the reports, as far as received, have been of a nature to lead to the belief that the increased earnings of the railroads will be sufficient to put them on a paying basis, thus obviating the payment of further bonus.

Under the stimulus of these wise measures Uruguay's primitive railway lines of the eighties have been rapidly replaced and extended, until today she has nearly 1700 miles of broad-gauge line, representing a capitalization of $70,000,000, and carrying annually upward of 1,500,000 passengers and 2,000,000 tons of freight. The rolling stock is thoroughly modern and of the best class. The locomotives are of the English pattern, and the passenger coaches principally American. Most of these are English-built, as are also the freight cars, which are much smaller and lighter than we are accustomed to see employed for grain and stock haulage in America.

So far, the railway lines have been built only to tap those parts of the country where agricultural development had preceded them. From now on, the plans of extension call for the building of lines whose construction may be compared to the joining of the first meshes in a net, and, should the hoped-for immigration be attracted, the land and the railroads will henceforward be opened up together.

Through the courtesy of the railroad people I was enabled, during my short stay in Uruguay, to make a flying trip over the most important of the lines at present in operation. In solidity of construction, service of trains, and the evidence of "system" everywhere apparent they impressed me as being superior to any pioneer railroads I have ever seen, while the country traversed is of astonishing fertility and seemingly lacking in nothing but population. I hope to arrive at a fuller appreciation of these sections at another time by traversing them less hurriedly.

In the construction of port works at Montevideo, Uruguay is completing a task, which, if it could have been finished ten years ago, would have worked greater benefit to the city and country than can be calculated at the present moment. The fact that vessels loading and discharging at Montevideo have had to lie in an open roadstead, fully exposed to the heavy storms that sweep up the river, militated very seriously against that port when once Buenos Aires completed her splendid $40,000,000 docks, even though the latter were a hundred miles further from salt water. The shallow water off Montevideo has made it necessary for even the river steamers to lighter their cargoes, and the same cause is assigned as a reason for the rapidity with which high seas are thrown up in the most moderate blows. The complete stoppage of all transfer of cargo for days at a time in periods of rough weather has earned for Montevideo the reputation of being one of the most expensive ports in the world, and is responsible, directly and indirectly, for the decadence of its shipping.

The new port works were begun in 1901 by a French company, which was successful in underbidding its English and German competitors for the contract. French machinery, material and labor are being employed to the fullest extent practicable. The work completed to date is of a most substantial character and generally acknowledged by foreign engineers to be a most creditable piece of construction.

About $20,000,000 is to be spent upon these works, and they are to be completed by 1908. The fact that so large a volume of River-Plate trade now emanates at up-river points, must effectually preclude the possibility of Montevideo's ever again seriously rivaling Buenos Aires as a shipping point, but the new docks are destined to become a factor only less important than the railways in the development and modernization of Uruguay.

The extension and electricizing of the tram system of Montevideo has been in progress since the beginning of the year 1905, and will be completed by the middle of 1906. The work is in the hands of the J. G. White Company, of London and New York, the biggest firm of electrical contractors in the world, and the activity to be observed in construction is in marked contrast with the Laissez faire seemingly inseparable with all work of this kind in Brazil.

In trackage, wiring and passenger equipment the Montevideo lines will be very similar to the suburban systems of London, which have served as models. The rails and cars are lighter than those in use on the interurban systems of Southern California, but some very ambitious figures are aimed at in the way of speed. The power distribution will be underground in the business portion of the city, and overhead in the residential sections and the suburbs.

That most of the power installation of this system is English rather than American, is due more to the fact that freights are much lower to the Plate from London than New York, than to a great difference in initial cost or a fancied superiority of English machinery. The rails are American, reimported from London, as are also the trucks of the cars. The bodies of the latter are of English make, and the motors French.

Uruguay's foreign trade is not large, but she manages to always keep a very creditable balance in her favor; a gain, however, which is almost offset by the large amount of gold that must go out of the country as interest on foreign loans and dividends on foreign capital invested in railroads and other enterprises. England always heads the list in amount of trade, with the United States, Germany and France alternating from year to year in second place. American import is backward for the same reason as with other South American countries—lack of American steamship lines, with resultant high freights, absence of banking relations and the scarcity of American people. At present Uruguay buys from us only such of her necessities as she cannot secure in Europe.

THE BILIOUS BILLIONAIRE.

IV.—TROUBLE WITH A TROUBLE BOSS.

By a Special Contributor.

THE jigger broke off from the thingummy just as the automobile was crossing the track in front of Armored Suburban Trolley Cruiser No. 114, and the Bilious Billionaire found himself at 2:15 p.m. out on the quiet countryside seventeen miles from the place for the 3 o'clock meeting of the directors of the Water Trust. The trolley car had knocked the top off the automobile and the automobile had knocked the bottom out from under the trolley car, and there was nothing doing. The motorman telephoned to the power-house while the chauffeur brushed off the Billionaire's clothes.

"The trouble wagon will be here in seven or eight minutes," the motorman said, lighting a cigarette, "as soon as it gets back from the railroad wreck."

In seven minutes the trouble wagon dashed up, stopped with a lurch that threw off two electric hoisting jacks, and an orderly assortment of ropes, tackle, crowbars and wire beside the disabled car, dislodged ten men from their seats on the wagon, one of them making a flying leap to the roof of the car to connect the jacks and other machinery with the power wire. As he shot from his seat on the wagon the Trouble Boss noted in his book the numbers of the car, automobile, motorman and conductor and the time of the accident.

"Throw that stink wagon over into the pasture!" shouted the Trouble Boss. "Put the jacks under the right-hand side of the car and tip it into the gutter out of the way. Telephone the general super that I will have the line clear in eight minutes and thirty seconds."

"That is my automobile, and you must leave it alone until my driver gets it fixed," said the Bilious Billionaire. "I must be downtown inside of forty minutes. I am P. J. Plenty."

"I am very glad to know you, Mr. Plenty," said the Trouble Boss. "I have known of you as the president of the company that owns the company that owns the company that leases the company that leases the company that owns this line, but I never had the pleasure of meeting you before. I will give you a couple of my experts to help your chauffeur, and they can work at your automobile much better in the pasture where there is plenty of room. We'll get you right downtown to wherever you want to go in about twenty minutes. Meanwhile, may I ask you to come into this interesting little road house here and have some refreshments?"

"Why, that is old Joe Girth's place, and he won't let an automobile inside the fence."

"Oh, that will be all right," said the Trouble Boss. "Now hike, boys," he added to his men.

When he looked back from the porch of the road house the Trouble Boss saw that his men had the trolley car well tilted over, and the automobile upside down in the pasture.

The landlord of the Horse's Arms greeted them with "Git out o' here; I've been keepin' this place fer twenty-five years fer man and beast, but no automobillyier that goes around scarin' honest men's hosses gits anything in my house."

"I told you so," said the Billionaire. "I don't want a drink, anyway."

"You send us a cold quart and a plate of club sandwiches right off," said the Trouble Boss to the Landlord, "or there won't a trolley car stop within two miles of your old chicken-fighting dive for a year." The landlord cussed, but he did it.

A few minutes later the Trouble Boss said to the grumbling passengers in the first of the stalled trolley cars back of the wreck. "Please take the next car, ladies and gentlemen. We are going to use this for a pilot car to see if the track is safe."

"Now, if you will just sign my report as a witness, Mr. Plenty," he said to the Bilious Billionaire," the track is clear, and we will run right in to your office without stopping, and you will be there about 2:55.

"But that is a wholesale waiver of claims for damages and everything else," shouted the Bilious Billionaire as he read the printed form.

"It will take at least two hours to get your automobile fixed," said the Trouble Boss, "and I can get you downtown in from twenty-two to twenty-five minutes."

The Bilious Billionaire signed.

"Any man with a sense of humor," once observed Frank Daniels, the comedian, "can always find something to his entertainment if he will stand near the box-office window of 'the opryhouse' in any small town and listen to the Rubes as they make known their wants to the man who peddles the tickets.

"Out in Ohio one afternoon I was standing near the box-office window a few minutes before the beginning of a matinée given by a friend's combination. A fine old boy from the country—one of the kind that sees about one show in two years—approached the window, his roll in hand, and delivered himself of the following:

" 'Say, young feller!' (In a voice loud enough to be heard a block away.) 'Gimme a good seat! I want it right down the middle lane and close up to the exercises!' "—[Harper's Weekly.

Colossal Caverns.

WONDERFUL KENTUCKY CAVES THAT ARE SELDOM VISITED.

By a Special Contributor.

AFTER spending two days at Mammoth Cave, studying the marvelous scenery along both the short and long routes, I fell in with an old explorer of that region who told me that I had not yet seen the beauties and wonders of this underground world. He said that if I would return he would take me to some caves seldom visited by tourists. So vivid was his descriptions that I decided to accept his invitation, and a few weeks later I was back in the land of caves and caverns.

I soon found that while Mammoth Cave is the largest and best known, it is but one of five hundred in Edmonson county alone. Some ninety of these have already been explored. Each of these has attractions peculiar to itself. The whiteness, the soft tints, the transparency, the delicacy of the gypsum and alabaster formations, stalactite and stalagmite, make some of the smaller caves, particularly White's, Hazen's and Longsdon, a charming flower garden. While the variety of scenery, the massive stalactites and stalagmites, the lofty domes, the awful pits, the charming waterfall, the lovely pools, the exquisite drapery, and beautiful ceiling decorations make Colossal Caverns a fit rival of Mammoth Cave itself. As Colossal has but recently been opened to the public, a brief description will, I am sure, prove of interest to readers of The Times.

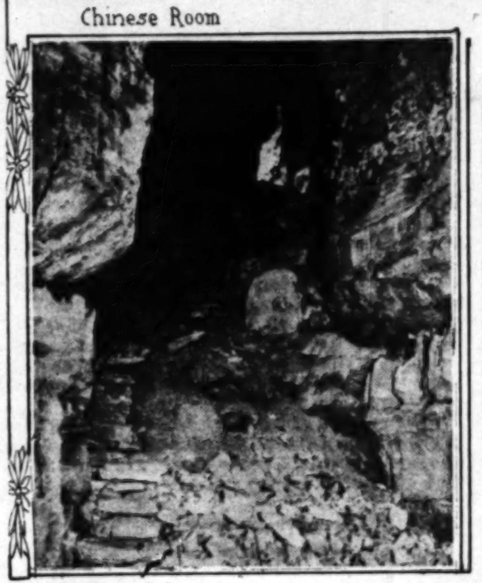
Entrance To Colossal Caverns



Colossal Dome

The floor of Colossal Caverns is 216 feet below the earth's surface. The present entrance is by an artificial passageway about three feet in width. The descent is by an easy flight of stone steps. When half-way down you can take a narrow path, leading off to the left about thirty feet, and enter a low circular room about 100 feet in diameter. In the center is a pool of water. The rim of this pool is called the Chinese wall. From the ceiling hang thousands of stalactites, so clear and transparent that the light of our lamps is plainly seen through them.

The main cave is about four miles in length and extends in a southerly direction. For about two miles the cavern attains a width of thirty feet and a height of forty feet. Florence avenue, Bicycle avenue and Register avenue are short divergences that run parallel with the main avenue.

Passing along the main avenue we are confronted here and there with large stationary rocks of limestone. Everett Rock, Sampson's Pillar, the Stern of the Great Eastern, are names given to some of the most shapely ones. There are two groups of detached rocks that look very much like the ruins of some great city. To one of these groups has been given the name of The Ruins of Carthage. To another, The Ruins of Martinique.

One of the things that adds to the charm of Colossal Cavern is the number of pools, springs and cascades. We have scarcely entered before a beautiful spring of clear, cold water, Uncle Tom's pool, opens at our feet. A little farther and Lizard Springs attracts us, for in the center of this spring is a large black or brown lizard. It is of flint rock and very lifelike. On the left of the lizard is Frog Stool of the same substance and equally as perfect in form. Farther on we enter a circular hall. Forty feet above us a stream falls from the ceiling above into a deep pit below, a charming cascade.

The Edge of the Great Pit.

We admire this, but a grander sight awaits us. A few yards farther we are standing on the edge of the Great Pit, eighty feet deep. On our right are mammoth stalactites and stalagmites. My guide illuminates the walls, and my eyes take a sweep of 500 feet. The side walls and the ceilings are covered with superb formation of alabaster and onyx, stalactites and stalagmites, pure and transparent. We are overcome by the magnificence of the scene. Nearly in the center of the pit is a basin of four feet in diameter. The sides of the basin glisten with thousands of cave pearls. This pit and its surroundings bear the appropriate name of Pearl Pool.

At the end of the cavern are Chalybeate Springs, whose waters are said to possess great medicinal properties. The stalactite formations are numerous and beautiful—some very large and others small and delicate and perfectly transparent. Leading off from the main cave are a number of cave chambers. The floors and ceiling are thickly set with these formations, which, when lighted up, present a beautiful picture. Many portions of the main cave display a great variety in decorative art. On walls and ceilings, bird and animal forms and human figures, sometimes the starry heavens, are beautifully depicted.

Wonderful Dome.

The domes, however, are the most wonderful features of Colossal Cavern. Vaughan Dome, with its perpendicular walls, 116 feet in height, carved and molded as by the hands of a mighty sculptor, is most impressive. This dome has two floors. In the center of the lowe a pool of clear, pure water, which reflects the li our lamps. The second floor, a few feet above, ered with sand. The acoustic properties of th are remarkable. Every sound is caught up and back, intensified, a thousand times.

All this is wonderful, but Colossal Dome is the ing attraction. Imagine yourself, if you can, i derground world. Before you and leading of hand, are spacious halls and avenues. Suddenly ushered into a great rotunda, more than 20 height, and more than sixty feet in diameter. T almost vertical and fluted and molded in the cate and marvelous manner. Such is Colossal D

We enter this dome about two-thirds of the the top and stand upon a bridge that has be structed across the dark abyss. The view fr point, as the guide throws out a light, is most sive. On every hand are great stalactites.

World's Largest Stalagmite.

Crossing the bridge, we begin the descent. calls my attention to the part we are r largest known stalagmite in the world, Henry C ument, a magnificent cone ninety-seven feet i Passing through a beautiful arch we contin scent down rude stone steps, winding round Henry Clay Monument and land in a lar chamber, 240 feet below the surface of the lowest level of the cavern. The darkness is ble. Our acetylene lamps throw a faint ray opposite side.

On our way out we stop to admire the pery on the walls of Florence avenue, Tresses, the Lion's Mane, the Sealskin Cloak, wonderful exhibitions of Nature's handi marvelous cavern. GEORGE

The Theater in Europe.

Plays, Players Audiences, in England, France, Italy.

By a Special Contributor.

THERE are about 200 theaters and houses of entertainment, all told, in London. But even this large number does not seem to satisfy the demand of her six millions. On any Wednesday, Thursday, or Saturday afternoon, well-dressed women and men may be seen standing before the most popular places, in long lines that reach all around the block, and waiting patiently from half an hour to two hours, for the chance to pay 75 cents to $1 for a poor enough seat from which to view the promised performance.

The line is called a "queue," and to see it for the first time an unsophisticated person might imagine that Eleanora Duse, at the very least, had come to town. "Bobbies" patrol the lines, guarding the prisoners, and preserving order. Oranges and other refreshments are hawked around by venders, and often the tedium of waiting is otherwise beguiled by songs and dances performed by street musicians who later pass the hat around.

There really seems to be no good and sufficient reason why these three-shilling seats should not be reserved in advance, but at only a few of the theaters is it possible. Another disagreeable feature connected with the management is the compelling of patrons to dive down into their pockets, and extract a sum varying from a penny to "thrippence," according to the location of their seat, for a programme. It might be supposed that these would be prettily gotten up to serve as souvenirs, with illuminated borders, perhaps, or in picture postcard style. But not so. They are the most ordinary handbills, printed on coarse paper, and containing merely a list of the actors' names, sandwiched in between advertising matter. There is not even a synopsis or description of the scenes of the play or opera, such as is often included in our free-gratis-for-nothing programmes.

This seems the crowning act of meanness on the part of London managers, and the lamb-like submission of the British public to such petty extortion does not justify their reputation for spirited resistance to imposition.

Once inside the theater, it must be owned, such minor disagreeables are forgotten, for the plays, though by no means great on the average, are always carefully acted by a company of all-round even excellence that contrasts painfully with our own too-often feeble galaxy of satellites wobbling uncertainly about a central star of very moderate magnitude.

London audiences are exceedingly outspoken and frank in their criticism, particularly the tenants of the pit and gallery seats. At a performance of "Sapho" in the suburbs, it soon became evident, by the freely-uttered comments of those around me, that they were keenly alive to every point of bad art and bad morals in the play, and that the fine acting of Olga Nethersole did not console them for these defects.

"That feller's as soft as mush," one woman remarked contemptuously of the hero, when, after feeble attempts to get rid of her, he had flung himself into the arms of Sapho. "Just like all them Frenchmen," she added. Her companion agreed that there surely was "too much huggin' about her neck" on his part, and they cried "break away!" when Miss Nethersole's embraces prolonged themselves beyond what they considered "the limit." They decided finally that the play was "too mushy" for them, which constituted sufficient condemnation in their eyes.

Two incidents will suffice to show the temper of the better class of London theater-goers. On one occasion a young lady (who had doubtless feed the usher) attempted to force herself into an already well-filled seat. The occupants reluctantly made a small place for her by squeezing themselves up very closely together, but finding herself decidedly "de trop" from the standpoint of her own comfort, the intruder vacated, her departure being marked by a spontaneous and simultaneous hand-clapping from the occupants of that and the neighboring seats, as a fitting rebuke to her temerity.

At some of the theaters, white-capped attendants offer cups of the national beverage (not thrown in, however,) between the acts. An elderly lady seated midway of the crowded rows near me signified her desire for one of these. To gratify her, all the other occupants of the row between her and the attendant were obliged to rise, burdened with all their wraps and impedimenta, and assist in passing the liquid refreshment, at the imminent risk of spilling the same over their best gowns. Setting their teeth hard, they nobly rose to the occasion, however, and every true Briton did his and her duty in the cause of a cup of tea, while the lady received it in her lily fingers, with bows and smiles of acknowledgment that must have amply compensated the victims of her thirst for their inconvenience! Such is British courtesy at its best—or worst—manifestation.

The famous London music-hall entertainments are similar to our vaudeville; the dances and specialties being first cousin to those in the Hoyt and other "farce-comedies." The topical songs, given in strong Cockney, are almost unintelligible to American ears. I was told, but did not make actual proof of the fact, that a lady going alone on the main floor is liable to insult, but she may occupy a seat in the stalls with perfect safety.

Notable among the plays I witnessed in London were Barrie's "Admirable Crichton," Tolstoi's "Resurrection," played by Beerbohm Tree, and Ibsen's "Vikings," by Miss Terry.

Often at home I have complained of the discomfort of our theaters; the narrow aisles, heated atmosphere, and so forth. But I shall "never do so no more," after visiting those of London and Paris, and more especially the latter. The playhouses of that city are constructed with a solicitous concern for the discomfort of patrons that puts to the blush the most indifferent, "public-be-damned" attitude of the London owners. Their shape is oblong instead of wide, and rounded so that only those who are seated in the limited space just opposite the stage can see anything (unless they be professional contortionists) and a still smaller number can hear.

This last fact is due not only to defective acoustics, but to Parisian standards of behavior. The audience, during the entire time of the performance, is occupied in holding "causeries" on their private, domestic and social affairs. The "play" is not the "thing" at all, to judge by the utterly absorbed and serious manner in which the crowd gabbles away, their chatter being punctuated by laughter, applause, expressions of satisfaction and dissatisfaction, and every other kind of noise that a human being is capable of making. Constant coughing, produced by the germ-filled atmosphere of the thickly-upholstered and unhealthy place, adds to the racket.

I witnessed some of the classic French dramas—"Moliere," "Racine," and "Corneille"—which would have been delightful had it not been for the above drawbacks. The enunciation is most correct and pure, the gestures and delivery graceful in the extreme; but there is a certain monotony and uniformity that is, I understand, the natural result of the training at the Conservatoire, where a rigid adherence to traditional methods discourages all spontaneity and originality.

The censorship, too, forbidding the production of all plays on religious or political subjects, must have its effect on the development of native drama, while every variety of low and vile, decadent and degenerate show flourishes. One of the latter places, which, as I learned from a resident, is situated on a side street, entirely remote from the foreign quarter, is frequented by the swellest Parisians, male and female. The performances given here have for their themes such a mingling of all unholy passions, murder, lust, violence, horror, cruelty and depravity, as to appeal only to moral perverts.

To illustrate, one of these plays has the following plots: A man, concealing himself in a woman's sleeping apartment for purposes of robbery, when discovered, relates to her circumstantially how he has murdered her lover while with him in a remote and lonely spot, the gruesome and horrible details of which narrative so fascinate the woman that she throws herself into his arms.

But one does not need to hunt up such morbid and decadent show in Paris—I did not—for those ordinarily given at supposedly respectable theaters are sufficiently indecent and objectionable to satisfy any person of however low and immoral tendencies. Were the censorship exercised to prevent the production of this kind of stuff, instead of to ban sociological questions, it would surely result in a vast benefit to society at large, and to the French people in particular.

It seems utterly impossible for the Gaul to appreciate the Anglo-Saxon's attitude in this respect. He persists in thinking it mere prudery, to satirize which and advertise the plays at the same time, the exclamation in the original (for which doubtless there is no French equivalent!) "Oh, shocking!" is prefixed to the announcements of a new piece of especially unsavory character, on the billboards.

There is a fundamental racial difference of viewpoint between the two peoples, regarding the whole province of art, the Anglo-Saxon considering either the lewd or the horrible outside art's legitimate domain—while the Gaul has no such prejudice. To illustrate, another play I saw has for its central motive the killing of a man's wife and family by burglars while in their country home, the husband and father, at his office in Paris, being an ear witness, by telephone, of the dreadful event, and powerless to prevent it.

"But what is the good of portraying this fearful and horrible happening?" the English or American auditor would ask, "of outraging and harrowing up the feelings to no purpose whatever?" In true tragedy, suffering and agony are the result of sin or wrongdoing, of the soul's struggle between right and wrong, of something which ennobles and dignifies that suffering. But here it is nothing but accident, and to the Anglo-Saxon is outside the province of art altogether.

The finest performance I witnessed in Paris was Sardou's "La Sorciere," which was a great success, running for weeks to crowded houses, notwithstanding its objectionable features to Catholic audiences in the realistic pictures of the Spanish Inquisition. Doubtless only an author of Sardou's fame could have successfully run the gauntlet of the censorship with such a play.

Gabriel de Max, as the infamous Cardinal Ximenes, clad in his scarlet and black robes, his ashen-gray countenance, peculiarly stealthy tread and other traits representative of the arch-inquisitor, was most impressive, and as the newspapers said, "surpassed himself.' As for "the divine Sarah," born a Jewess, and perchance having in her veins the blood of one persecuted race, she fulfilled to perfecttion, it goes without saying, the character of the Moorish heroine accused of sorcery. When threatened by the Cardinal, in the Inquisition chamber, with the pains of eternal punishment, she rises to superb heights of scorn and denunciation, in a gradual crescendo, reaching at last a grand climax of tragic passion that makes the "voice of silver" sound a brazen trumpet of fiery wrath, as she cries, "Ici c'est—l'enfer, l'enfer, l'enfer!" ("It is here—hell, hell, hell!")

The process of obtaining a seat at any of the principal houses is a costly one in time and nerve expenditure, as well as cash. Scales of prices vary for each theater, and moreover, each varies in itself for the different performances, and these are further complicated by trickiness and double dealing on the part of speculators, winked at by the management, so that it would require the acumen of a Philadelphia lawyer or judge to decide just what a seat in a Paris theater is really worth.

All the theaters begin at different hours, giving matinée performances on different days. To get accurate information—the papers do not give it—you must go to the theater beforehand. Your ticket is an autograph document, made out with all the tedious ceremony attaching to a birth or death certificate, a passport or other official paper. I momentarily expected to be asked details of my family history, such as are required to be inscribed by foreigners on hotel registers, and so forth.

Then, to crown all, and in true conformity with French fickleness, the play is apt to be changed at the last moment. I had one experience of this kind, having after a tedious wait and after repeated assurances that the opera was to be given on that evening, procured a ticket for "Aida," only to find, when I took my seat, the curtain rising on quite a different scene and setting from what I had always associated with that work. By inquiry, and consultation of the bill, I learned that I was to witness a performance of "Herode;" but as "Aida" was the opera I desired to see and had paid for, I marched to the box office, and demanded my money back, which was given me, after the manifestation of great astonishment on the part of the management that any one should be so unreasonable.

Traveling from France to Germany, the conditions are much improved, the theaters being more commodious and comfortable, and, especially during the summer time, good seats being procurable for a song. In Berlin I saw a splendid performance of that wonderful tragedy, "The Master of Palmyra," for the sum of 35 cents, and at the Dresden Operahouse heard the "Meistersingers" and the "Gotterdammerung" for the same price.

"The Master of Palmyra," a superb five-act dramatic poem, the subject of a eulogistic article by Mark Twain, published a few years ago, has never been translated, or played, I understand, anywhere in the world, except in Berlin and Vienna. It forms five distinct and complete tragedies, the heroine being reincarnated in a different character in each act.

It is doubtless due in part to the existence of a national, subsidized theater in Germany that such a splendid performance, lasting for four hours, with all its accessories of perfect stage setting, beautiful oriental costumes, given by some of the best actors in the country, can be enjoyed—for 35 cents.

Maxim Gorky's "Nacht-Asyl," or the "House of Refuge," was given at one of the minor theaters with a fidelity of realism that is almost revolting at the time, but which haunts the mind like a nightmare forever after, preaching the most striking lesson in sociology that it is possible for the mind to conceive.

The scenes in this powerful little play take place in one of those night asylums for the destitute in Russia, somewhat similar to our own Salvation Army resorts, but conducted by the government, and the evils and abuses of which cry to heaven—at least they did to Gorky—for redress.

In Italy—land of art—one may witness the drama in one of its forms—I will not say the only one—of perfection. It was at San Remo, that picturesque little city on the borders of the blue Mediterranean, in the Italian Riviera, that I was able to fulfill one of the dearest desires of my European trip. I saw Eleanora Duse, queen of the Italian, and methinks, of the world's stage, in a play, which, luckily for my better understanding and enjoyment, I was already familiar with in the original, Pinero's "Second Mrs. Tanqueray."

The theater is a tiny one, and the stage, so small as to seem suitable only for an amateur performance, with its setting of an English drawing-room, favored the illusion, completed by the absolutely quiet, breathless audience, that here was a true life drama, acted out before one's eyes.

"La Duse" in this part was the living exponent of simplicity in art; she used no make-up of the features, or any cosmetic whatsoever (I believe that is one of her peculiar individualities) and compared with her extreme naturalness, even Bernhard seems a wire-worked puppet. I had seen two of the greatest English actresses in the part, but neither gave the impression of a woman suffering for her sin, conveyed in those indescribable touches—the infinite pathos of expression. Certainly this was an Italian Paula, and not an English one, but with the marvelously free, graceful movements, the play of feature and gesture, that are purely of the South, there was the spiritual depth and earnestness of the North. For the rest, in her directness and simplicity, in her cast of coloring and features, Duse reminded me in a subtle, inexplicable way of an American woman off the stage.

It seemed fitting that one should hear at least one Italian opera in the land of its birth, and with this idea, I attended a performance of "La Boheme," in Florence, but must confess that the audience, more than the opera, was the supreme attraction. In its utter abandonment to its emotions, its storms of hisses and wild outbursts of applause, its ignoring of what did not please it by perusing the newspapers meanwhile and flirting—the gilded youths and bald heads in the dress circle communicating with their lady friends in the boxes by means of a deaf-and-dumb alphabet of love—it certainly made good its reputation of being the most demonstrative in the world.

HIS PART.

The president of the great naval school fixed a stern frown upon the guilty sophomore.

"So you admit," he said, "that the unclad freshman was dragged two miles across the snowy fields, and dipped eighteen times in a tank of ice water? What part was yours in this disgraceful business?"

"The right leg, sir," the sophomore answered humbly.

Medical Superstitions.

NEW AND INTERESTING COLLECTIONS IN NATIONAL MUSEUM.

From a Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—Unique and extraordinary interest is a series of exhibits illustrating the superstitions of medicine, now being accumulated for the National Museum by Dr. James M. Flint, curator of medicine. It already includes a large number of amulets, talismans and fetiches; also paraphernalia employed in exorcism, invocation, incantation, the laying on of hands and the royal touch. Its most striking lesson is that mankind in general is today every jot as gullible, when imbued with the dread of disease, as it was in ancient and medieval times. In fact the photograph of a very scientific and modern-appearing domestic medicine chest of the wife of Pharaoh Mentuhotep, 2500 B.C., seen in juxtaposition to the left hind shoe of a cross-eyed mule, such as esteemed by many Americans of today as a sovereign remedy for cramps, might suggest to him who contemplates the exhibit that the current of human understanding has been flowing backward these five millenniums past.

The Vegetable Lamb.

One of the most striking items in the collection is an excellent specimen of the Kou-Chi, or "vegetable lamb," a curious plant which, although connected with the ground by a root yet—as firmly believed in England, a century back—"rejoiced in a sort of flesh and blood, browsed upon the surrounding herbs by turning round upon its axis, or root, until, having devoured all within reach, it perished a victim of hunger." This peculiar vegetable growth, known also to the Chinese as the "Golden-haired Dog," bears a striking resemblance to a small quadruped, even to being densely covered with a soft, golden-brown hair-like growth. It was esteemed as a drug of marvelous properties by the pharmacists of Europe during the 16th and 17th centuries, and was believed even by physicians to be a plant animal. In China today it is valued as a tonic as well as a renewer of youth.

Shrieking Gallows Plant.

Another acquisition is a very excellent specimen of mandrake root, because of whose rude resemblance to the human form many magical properties were ascribed to it in olden times. It was believed to grow only under a gallows, "where the matter that has dropped from the dead body hath given it the shape of a man." It was said that "he who would take up a plant thereof must tie a dogge thereunto to pull it up, which (the root) will give a great shriek at the digging up. Otherwise, if a man should do it, he would certainly die in a short space thereafter." Thus, in "Romeo and Juliet" are the lines:

"And shrieks like mandrakes torn out of the earth,
That living mortals hearing them run mad."

Also, in "Henry VI":

"Would curses kill as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as searching bitter terms,
As curst, as harsh, as horrible to hear."

Mandrake root was formerly in constant ous incantations and love potions and was lets to prevent race suicide. According to most useful property was its power to which could not endure either its odor or its Sympathetic Powder and Weapon Salve.

An exhibit illustrative of a method of healing repute during the seventeenth century is a of "Sympathetic Powder" (calcined copper Roman vitriol), supposed to have the power of wound if applied, not to the wound itself, weapon inflicting it, or to a piece of garment blood from the wound. Alongside of this will some of the "armary ointment" or "weapon salve" larly applied. This balm was prepared according following formula:

"Of the moss grown on a human skull, Mumy (gum prepared from mummies or half an ounce; human fat depurated, two of line seed, twelve drachms; oyl of roses meniack and one ounce. Touch Pieces, for King's Evil.

One of the most valuable acquisitions is a piece"—a gold coin of the time of Charles land, such as used by that king in the scrofula, of "king's evil." One Way to Cure a "Tummy" Ache.

At one time it was customary for a supers tian with a stomach ache to go hang in little silver pendant hammered into the sha length human figure with a very diabolical countenance and with both hands firmly clas affected organ. Jehovah was supposed to n figure—about two inches high—that John eaten too much green apples and to instin that John was the very fellow represented; ability to perceive John in the original and, latter's superior form as well as by his gesticulation, to observe that he had misery basket, was for some reason doubted. If so both "tummy" ache and headache, he ha fashioned to represent him with one hand gestive and the other upon his reasoning was just pure, sheer belly ache proper, and at that, the sufferer was wont to have merely part fashioned in silver, that the divine eye better concentrated upon it. A collection of offerings, acquired by Dr. Flint, are expres of the cases described, but include a pendan ing a human hand, which appears as thou have been hung up, as an appeal to divine politician of old who had just received a d his admirers.

Spider in Nutshell for Ague.

A large black spider inclosed in a walnut s after being perforated at one end to receive a r e hung about the neck, illustrates treatment f steemed from the time of Discorides, the famou hysician, to the present. Thus in Longfellow's eline we read:

"Only beware of the fever, my friends, beware fever!
For it is not like that of our Acadian climate,

Another amulet is a small packet containing f the Koran, carefully folded, covered with leath his hands at once, while they knelt before him. After doing this amidst ceremonies participated in by his physicians and chaplains, the King hung one of the "touch pieces," suspended from a cord or ribbon, about the neck of each patient and finally washed his hands, which last-named action was about the only sane feature of the performance.

One Way to Cure a "Tummy" Ache.

At one time it was customary for a superstitious Christian with a stomach ache to go hang in his church a little silver pendant hammered into the shape of a full-length human figure with a very diabolical expression of countenance and with both hands firmly clasped over the affected organ. Jehovah was supposed to note from this figure—about two inches high—that John Smith had eaten too much green apples and to instinctively know that John was the very fellow represented; yet Jehovah's ability to perceive John in the original and, by aid of the latter's superior form as well as by his more lifelike gesticulation, to observe that he had misery of the bread basket, was for some reason doubted. If some one had both "tummy" ache and headache, he had the figure fashioned to represent him with one hand upon his digestive and the other upon his reasoning organ. If it was just pure, sheer belly ache proper, and a bad one at that, the sufferer was wont to have merely the affected part fashioned in silver, that the divine eye might be the better concentrated upon it. A collection of these votive offerings, acquired by Dr. Flint, are expressive not only of the cases described, but include a pendant representing a human hand, which appears as though it might have been hung up, as an appeal to divine aid, by some politician of old who had just received a delegation of his admirers.

"Ordeal Bark" for Casting Out Witches.

The curator has also obtained some specimens of "ordeal bark," otherwise known as "sassy" or mancona. In Western Africa, where all diseases are believed to be due to witchcraft, it is the function of the native doctors to point out the guilty witch, in each case. The suspect is condemned to partake of a strong drink of the "sassy" concoction, and after doing so, must exclaim: "Am I a witch?" quite as persistently as Frank Daniels was once wont to ask: "Am I a wizard?" Each time the afflicted one repeats this question, one of his judges, walking behind him—and with fine disregard for the "presumption of innocence" doctrine—answers, in stentorian voice: "You are a witch!" If during this long-drawn-out performance the "sassy" treatment has produced vomiting, the judges with great gusto pronounce the defendant innocent, and the recovery of the patient is supposed to follow the death of the witch. But if the prisoner does not commit the nuisance prescribed, the "sassy" dispensers continue to pour their decoction down his gullet until he expires.

"Perkins' Tractors."

A pair of the once famous "Perkins' tractors" is another interesting acquisition. This instrument, invented by Dr. Elisha Perkins of Norwich, Conn., who lived from [illegible] to 1799, comprises two short, conical, pointed instruments, each flattened on one side. One has the appearance of brass and the other of steel, the two being applied simultaneously by drawing the points over the affected parts for about twenty minutes at each sitting. Wonderful cures by those "tractors" were attested in the eighteenth century by eminent jurists, professors, physicians and clergymen of both America and Europe, and the cures were supposed to result from galvanism.

Amulet for Cholera.

An amulet valued as a protection against cholera is a flannel bag worn suspended from the neck and containing a small tube filled with mercury. The wearing of this amulet had its origin a century ago in Germany during a great cholera epidemic during which the workmen in the quicksilver mines of Istria were noted to enjoy a remarkable immunity from the disease. It was at once concluded that quicksilver had some magic power in dispelling the pestilence, and people commenced wearing it in these little tubes hung about their necks.

The "mad stone"—as much in repute today as centuries ago, as an infallible remedy for hydrophobia, after the bite of a dog—is shown in several forms. It is applied to the wound, from which it is supposed to absorb the poison, and after use is soaked in warm milk and water, by which liquids the virus is supposed to be reabsorbed and the stone made ready for a future application. One of the specimens collected is of halloysite, believed to be the mineral of which some of the most famous madstones of the world are composed. It absorbs moisture with avidity, and will adhere to a moistened surface until nearly saturated. A highly polished seed of the Kentucky coffee tree, acquired for the exhibit, was offered to the Smithsonian, as a genuine madstone of proved efficacy, for $1000. Another specimen is an alleged madstone said to have been found in a deer's stomach by an Apache Indian. It is a pebble of carbonate of lime which may in fact have been swallowed with food or water by a deer as its surface is etched, as if, perhaps, by the action of the gastric juices. It was sent to the museum as a veritable madstone by a citizen of New Mexico.

Spider in Nutshell for Ague.

A large black spider inclosed in a walnut shell, the latter being perforated at one end to receive a ribbon to be hung about the neck, illustrates treatment for ague, esteemed from the time of Discorides, the famous Greek physician, to the present. Thus in Longfellow's "Evangeline" we read:

> "Only beware of the fever, my friends, beware of the fever!
> For it is not like that of our Acadian climate,
> Cured by wearing a spider hung around one's neck in a nutshell."

Another amulet is a small packet containing a copy of the Koran, carefully folded, covered with leather and protected from the moisture of the body by some resinous application. This is worn by the Soudanese warriors as a protection from both wounds and disease.

In a large jar the curator has placed an excellent specimen of "snake slough," simply the epidermis of a snake, such as bound around the foreheads and temples of Englishmen, even unto today, to cure headache. It is also used to extract thorns, being applied to the back of the hand, for example, if the thorn be in the palm.

Then there is a necklace of coral such as worn to stop a flux of blood to drive away ghosts, illusions and bad dreams; to harden diseased gums, cleanse putrid sores relieve pains in the stomach, etc. Coral is taken internally in powder mixed with wine to cure gravel and by some people is hung upon fruit trees to insure fertility or protect from hail and biting winds. It was in great repute during the middle ages as a drug and amulet, while Sanscrit medicine taught that it "is a specific against cold and biliousness, and the wearing of it is very beneficial to women." Indeed, coral beads are still strung about the necks of American children as a specific against the diseases of childhood.

Negro "Hoodoo" Talismans.

To illustrate the Voodoo, Hoodoo, Obi or Obeah, that species of sorcery practiced by negroes of Africa and continued by some of their descendants in the United States and the West Indies, the curator has obtained a typical amulet consisting of a chicken feather, some human hair, a drop of blood, a bit of rag and a pine sliver all tied together and sewed in a bit of shirting. This little bag is to be worn about the neck as a cure-all, and to prevent the working of the "hoodoo" on or against the wearer. There are also specimens of peony root such as carried in the pocket as a preventive of insanity, or strung in necklaces which prevent convulsions or epilepsy; a horse chestnut such as now carried in the pockets of all classes in this country as a specific against rheumatism, but which must be begged or stolen before it can be efficacious; small branches of mistletoe such as worn suspended from the neck for epilepsy, if cut with a gold knife when the moon is six days old; the knee-cap of a sheep worn next to the skin during the day or beneath the pillow at night, as a cure for cramp; a deer's foot such as is often heated and rubbed over a painful or aching tooth; and a "cramp ring" made from a nail that has been used to fasten a coffin and dug out of a graveyard.

Rheumatism Candle.

A "rheumatism candle"—a partially consumed arc-light carbon—carried in the pockets of Americans of today as a cure for rheumatism and neuralgia; a large disk of copper such as worn about the neck as a preventive of neuralgia and cholera; also a skein of scarlet silk thread, tied in the strictly prescribed nine knots and to be worn about the neck as a cure for nose-bleed, are among other modern items.

Odd Cure for Toothache.

An odd treatment for toothache is illustrated by an iron nail such as must be used to scarify the gums until it bleeds, after which the nail, covered with blood, must be driven into a wooden beam up to the head. Moreover, there is a lock of hair such as is often cut from the head of a child suffering from whooping cough, then placed between slices of bread and fed to a dog. If, while partaking, the dog should cough, the disease is supposed to be immediately transferred to him.

In addition to the aforementioned left hind shoe of a cross-eyed mule—to be carried in the pocket as a cure for cramps, or kept near the bedstead that it may be readily seized in case of a nocturnal attack—there is, last, but not least, the right foot of a rabbit such as is carried in the pockets of hundreds of us superstitious mortals of today as a sovereign specific for rheumatism. The label prepared for this exhibit omits, however, to specify that the left hind foot of the same gentle rodent is highly prized by poker players if the victim—that is, the rabbit—has been shot in a graveyard, at the dark of the moon.

STUPIDITY OF BEES.

AN APIARIST WHO THINKS THEY SHOW FEEBLE BRAIN POWER.

[New York Tribune:] "It would be foolish to deny that honey bees show many qualities of a high order of instinct, but they also show, in a great many instances, a remarkable degree of stupidity," writes Louis Rhead in The Outlook. "Yet for centuries, poets and writers have held them up as paragons of wisdom. Maurice Maeterlinck, in his most poetical description of the nuptial flight of the queen bee and the dramatic death of the favorite lover, is one instance. On the other hand, Sir John Lubbock, in his 'Ants, Bees and Wasps,' dismisses the honey bee with little ceremony, finding it infinitely less interesting and intelligent than the ant. There is no question that the ant, at every turn, outwits the bee in its home by stealing its hard-earned store. In fact, so numerous are the enemies of bees that it is no wonder that they are supplied by nature with means to resist and even to attack the thieves who wish to take their earnings.

"First comes the bee moth, whose caterpillar bores through the comb; then the ant, the spider, and the wild bumblebee. The caterpillar of the bee moth bores and destroys the comb; the spider kills the bees and sucks their blood, and the ant, the wild bumblebee and various flies steal the honey. These enemies hover about and commit their depredations near the hive, and were it not for the extraordinary fecundity of the queen mother the bees' struggle for existence would soon cease.

"One would naturally conclude that so bold a creature would have the faculty of resisting its numerous small enemies, but, in fact, it is exactly the opposite. The bee seems paralyzed by a spider. Although its vision and scent are so keen that it cannot fail to see a spider busily working and weaving its web right in front of the mouth of the hive, yet one after another will fly right into the web, to sure death. One of the beekeeper's constant duties is to clear spiders away from the vicinity of the hive, especially from the entrance.

"In front of one of my hives I grew a Japanese iris. On this the spiders would string their web, carrying it to the hive so that one out of every twenty bees emerging and entering would be captured. In every instance where I have watched a bee entangled in the web its first and only object was to free itself. While it is struggling, the spider winds it securely, and not till this is done does he use his nippers to draw the blood; the struggle gets fainter; still the bee, equal or superior in size and strength, has opportunity to sting, but does not. It simply makes all effort possible to get free.

"With ants the case is different, because they invariably enter the hive, and, as they are unable to fly, the bee has the advantage of being able to pounce upon them and hold them down. Last winter a colony of ants made their way into the hive by boring through a crevice in the footboard which was old and comparatively rotten. During the fall they bored passages in all directions, and there located their colony, and at intervals climbed up to the cells, stealing the honey and depositing it for future use. In midwinter the bees usually come out of the hives from time to time. But from this hive no bees appeared. I was somewhat surprised that four colonies came out of the hives and one did not. On lifting the top, I found the combs covered with the entire colony, and every one stone dead—forty thousand bees motionless, their bodies shining as naturally as in life. I lifted the frames out to make an examination, and in so doing, lifted the body of the hive from the footboard. This disclosed a large and numerous colony of ants in a semi-dormant condition, with a plentiful supply of honey in their quarters. I came to the conclusion that the ants had stolen every particle of the bees' winter food, and the bees were consequently starved to death.

"The question arises, 'Why are not bees endowed with instinct to destroy so persistent an enemy?' They have the same sense of smell, and the same sense of sight as the ant, yet in this instance probably months of depredations on their hard-earned stores went serenely on without any effort to stop it. The average number of bees in a healthy hive is about 60,000, yet I venture to say that 80 per cent. in one year come to an untimely end.

"Again, on bright days during the winter, they will issue forth. No matter if the snow is on the ground and the air is chilly; if only the sun shines, they will fly around. I have seen them on these occasions fly for a few moments and then drop helplessly on the snow, and after a time, for a space of a few yards around the hive, they lie so thick that the snow is hidden. On these occasions the beekeeper will often lose from 50,000 to 100,000 bees. The question may well be asked, 'Why does the bee not know, not have instinct enough to know, that the temperature is lower than he can bear?' Some bekeepers say they would die, anyhow; but that is no reason, for in summer they fan to keep cool, and in winter fan to keep warm, and they would succeed in weathering the winter's cold if they kept in their hive.

"Another instance may be mentioned of what I call bee stupidity. I had about a pint of sour honey which had run from unsealed combs, and placed it in a flat plate before the hives for the bees to remake. In ten minutes the first bee got on the plate, took a few sips and left. Shortly after others followed. In the space of twenty minutes I counted eighteen ants and nine flies—two of the large blue-bottle variety, the remainder being different kinds of small wasps—and forty hive bees. I had been careful to place small chips of wood for the bees to alight on while floating in the sticky mass, yet every one of the forty bees floundered in up to their eyes in the liquid sweet. On removing three of the live ones to the edge of the plate, they promptly struggled back, refusing the opportunity to crawl through the grass to clear their bodies and get their wings dry to enable them to carry the honey to the hive. On the other hand, the flies and ants carefully stood on the edge of the honey—the ants in a perfect row, equally distant from each other, with not even their feet soiled; but when gorged to the limit of safety, away they would go and soon return for a fresh supply.

"The oft-repeated praise of the tender solicitude of the nurse and doctor bees seems in striking contrast with the callous movements of healthy bees who pass by their dead or wounded sisters without the slightest notice, but will quickly remove them if work is impeded, taking no end of trouble to pick the body up, fly some distance and then drop it. A single bee may be seen tugging and pulling, the rest working merrily on, taking no notice whatever nor giving assistance; yet in the hive comb building every one helps his neighbor in building a cell. The same thing applies to a bee struggling in a spider's web. The strength of a union of twelve bees flying with savage force against the fragile web would at once set a prisoner free; yet, while they are indifferent to their comrade's trouble, if a young terrier pup ventures within a yard or so of the hive a dozen bees are on him like a flash, and with unerring judgment they know his tender spots.

"Many minor things might be mentioned to show that the honey bee is not only stupid, but more so than the average insect with which it comes in contact, although it is admittedly a wonderful creature in many ways. If it were not for its sweet and toothsome honey, we should have no more respect and affection for it than for the common hornet."

TAKING IT HUMOROUSLY.

"Witte," said Nicholas, looking up from a voluminous report of another conspiracy in the Caucasus.

"Sire?" said Count Sergius.

"I think I'll write a book."

"And why, sire?" the favorite asked.

"Because," said the Czar, with a wan smile, "I have so many plots to choose from."

SIMILARITIES BETWEEN CHINESE AND INDIAN SIGNS.

By a Special Contributor.

THE many points of resemblance between the Indians of America and the natives of Asia, notably the Chinese, have been commented, agreed and disagreed upon for many years. Far be it from me to advance any arguments for or against the common origin of the two races.

The fact that there was at least communication between them has been almost universally conceded by students and wise men of both east and west. The extent and duration of the intercourse is another bone of contention, which has been gnawed at till fleshbare.

Having lived for a term of years with both the Indians and Chinese, I found it a most interesting and profitable occupation to investigate the customs, and signs or characters of the two languages, many of which are identical.

While on one of the California Indian reservations, my attention was first attracted to the subject by a San Francisco Chinaman asking me if I had noticed that the ancient sign, used by the Indians as a charm against bad luck, was the same that the Chinese painted on their houses to drive away the evil spirits. Upon subsequently residing for nearly a decade in China, I found that every house in the country villages was ornamented with this sign, and that many others of their customs, superstitions and beliefs were identical. I have also found, since my return to the United States, that it is not necessary to go to the Orient to make observations on this subject. San Francisco's Chinatown furnishes abundant opportunities to students of these coincidences.

Ancestral worship, so devoutly practiced by the Chinese, and not unknown among other Asiatics, was one of the religious ceremonies of the Indians even to the sixteenth century. The French writer, Abbe Brasseur de Bourbourg, describes it in these words: "People of condition made wooden statues of their parents, of which the occiput was hollow; they burned a part of the body and deposited the ashes in this receptacle, and closed the opening. They preserved these statues, with much veneration, among the idols, and kept both statues and idols in the oratorios of their houses, where they were looked upon with tenderness as well as reverence. On all feast days and days of general rejoicing they made offerings of food to them.

"As soon as a king died, a statue was always made in his image, and placed upon the bed of state. The chiefs then paid their homage to it. It was then stripped of its garments, and after being washed from head to foot with blue water, was reclothed and crowned with a diadem ornamented with a heron's plume. The singers approached it in turn, having their faces tinted blue, and bearing flowers and perfumes in their hands, to chant the praises of the king. Both the body and the statue were then transported to the temple."

The present observance of this custom is know as the "Annual Burning," and as to time and ceremony resembles much the autumn festivals so religiously observed by the Chinese, wherever they live. The feasts spread for the spirits, and the burning of offerings is seen annually in San Francisco, where they form one of the "Chinatown sights" for the tourist and interesting studies for the artist.

These annual sacrifices begin in the Chinese 6th month, 14th day, and extend to the 9th month, each temple or company hall celebrating the birthday of the god worshiped in that particular place. The narrow alleys of Chinatown are completely roofed over with Chinese matting. Lanterns are strung along (in these modern days, electric lights take their place), illuminating the set pieces of ancient Chinese mythological scenes, represented by fancifully dressed figures. These are imported from China specially for the occasion. At the doors of the temples are the immense paper images and their offerings, which are burned on the street the third, fifth, or seventh day at 4 o'clock in the morning, this hour being selected because of security against interference. I have attended these burnings, and find little difference between them and the Indian "Burnings for the Dead." They are not to be confounded with the spring worship at the ancestral tombs, or "Tsing Ming" of the Chinese families, when the relatives spread the annual feast for the deceased parents and grandparents to the third generation. That is distinctly a family affair, while the autumn sacrifices, or "Dah Chiu," are for the benefit of the neglected spirits of the friendless dead, who might revenge themselves upon the living were they not provided for. It is the oriental All Souls Day, when the hungry souls are invited to a free spread, which their unfilial or poverty-stricken sons have failed to provide. The contributions to the fund of the "Da Chiu" amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars, and free lunches are provided for the general public beside the elaborate dinners for the members of the company, each night during the celebration.

The Indian "Burnings" might be described in almost the same words. Though the cost of the affair is not so great in American dollars, the beads and clothing burned are of more value to them than the paper offerings of the Chinese.

The practice, of both Indians and Chinese, of placing various objects before a young child, and determining that his profession will be by his choice of articles, is well known.

The marriage customs resemble each other in many particulars, one being that the marriage is not consummated till the fourth day, when in China, the bride returns from a brief visit to her mother to enter the bridegroom's house as a member of his family, not to see her own relatives again for many months.

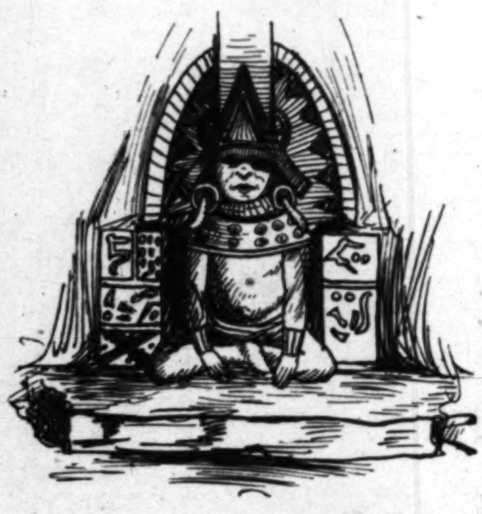
It is also a curious fact that the anchors, used in Panama and Mexico, at this day, are the same as we find in Japan and the north of China, that is, four hooks without a barb.

The monosyllabic character of the language is noticed among many of the Indian tribes. The ideographs of the Indian languages, which have not developed into a written language with an alphabet, are characterized by the absence of the sound of the letter R, which is not to be found in the Chinese language at all.

The custom of filling the coffins with clothing or rolls of cloth, and other gifts for the use of the dead, is common to both nations. The Chinese wedge the corpse in tightly, and as their coffins are large, even the bedding on which the person lay when dying is wrapped round it.

Two amusing incidents were told to me by the principals, concerning this custom.

A teacher on an Indian reservation in California missed a handsome fur cape, and after advertising widely for it, gave it up for lost. Several months afterward she was present at the funeral of one of her pupils, a little girl. The coffin had been closed before she arrived, but was opened to receive the parting present of a belated relative. To her surprise and indignation she saw that the child was enveloped in her cherished fur cape. She said nothing, knowing the unpardonable sacrilege she would commit were she to demand it.



MEXICAN GOD QUETZALCOATL.

A newly-arrived missionary in China, seeing the body of a Chinese woman lying on the bare boards, generously placed her best white Marseilles spread under her. When the body was lifted into the coffin, it was rolled up snugly in the spread, and she stood meekly by, not daring to speak. The Chinese relatives thanked her for her gift, and to have asked for the return of it would have shocked them inexpressedly. The superstitious Chinese would have burned it, had it not occurred to them to pay her the compliment of burying it with the corpse, for even the bed boards are burned or given to the coolies who carry the body away.

The Chinese legend of the eclipse, "The Celestial Dragon Swallowing the Sun," and the beating of tom-toms and gongs to frighten him away is known to the Indians. We find constantly traces of serpent or dragon worship among the Indians, and at this time serpents are kept in temples in China as representatives of the ancient dragon.

Besides the above there are numberless little coincidences of belief and custom that point to a time, however distant, when the Chinese knew something of America; but whether they settled America, as some claim, or whether they came originally from America, as others believe, I do not know.

Humboldt says that the calendars of the two countries are the same, both dividing the ecliptic into twenty-seven or twenty-eight parts, and giving to each lunar day the name of the stars near which the moon is found, to be placed in its progressive movement from west to east. Both the Mexicans and the Thibetans regard this as the fifth age of the world, in opposition to the Hindoo theory of four ages, or "suns."

It has been almost impossible to fix the beginning of the year among the Indians, some saying a certain day in January, and others putting it as late as March. In China, while the year is lunar, its commencement is regulated by the sun, and comes on the first new moon after the sun enters Aquarius, thus fixing the date not earlier than January 21 nor later than February 19.

One of the most interesting proofs of the similarity of the religions of the Chinese and Mexican Indians, is a Mexican image, now in the museum of the Ethnographical Society of Paris, which is said to be a representation of the god Quetzalcoatl, and is certainly a close imitation of the Asiatic Buddha. To the left of the image is a Chinese character Buddha, reversed in engraving probably Fut or Fu or Fo, as it is variously pronounced. The character for "bow," Kung, with four nearly straight lines forms the character Fut. The position of the image is precisely that of Buddha, and the features are Asiatic.

EARLE ROSS.

THE LIMIT.

"Perdition take these trusts and monopolies!" he cried, ruffling his long hair. "They are actually limiting now the output of Velasquez portraits and Raphael madonnas, while only three men are allowed to paint Whistlers, which are the only things that sell today."

GROWTH OF THE SKULL.

SERIES OF MODELS ILLUSTRATING DEVELOPMENT AND PROGRESS.

[New York Tribune:] How man's headpiece was built up from a fishy beginning; how his face happens to be under his cranium; what he has gained and lost in his top works during the last few million years—these are the profound questions that may be more easily answered when the scientists of the Museum of Natural History have studied a new collection of skull models. The work of making a model collection which will show the development of skulls from the lowest forms to the highest has been in progress for the last eighteen months. The reptiles have just been reached in the ascending scale of being.

It is the motto of science to work slowly but surely; therefore, the more startling results are held in abeyance, and it would be taking a liberty to predict the announcement that Shakespeare's brow was rounded by the mud-nosing habit of the lamprey, or that the Czar of Russia owes his inconstant mentality to the playful salamander. No savant would be so personal, anyway.

One might ask why the skull was chosen for study instead of the brain. The answer for one thing is that no brain exists without its envelope, and by measuring the cavities it is easy to know the exact content of gray matter. Moreover, the cranial bones involve the larger structure of the entire head. As for the question whether skull or brain came first, it is like the riddle of chicken and egg.

Many of the lower forms being embryonic and almost microscopic, it would be next to impossible for the scientists to make a thorough comparative study of the skulls in their natural state. So by an intricate process there are made wax models many thousand times larger than the original. A skull no bigger than a pinhead becomes a structure a foot long and a half as wide by this process, so that it may be examined in all its parts at leisure. If this seems a miracle, it can be beaten by the instance of a rotifer that is enlarged from invisibility to 343,000,000 times its size.

How the brain and skull developed has always been a deep study with scientific men. In the last century Goethe supported the theory of purely vertebral growth, but the late research shows the skull to be of composite derivation. It has arisen in part from a modification of anterior vertebrae, but the lower bones, and particularly the lower jaw, have a different origin. Many face bones are not preformed in cartilage, but are laid down as membranes, and others owe their origin to a modification of the anterior gills. In the higher animals these latter are replaced by membrane bones, and the derivatives of gills appear only in embryonic stages. A person complimental on beautiful ears, therefore, may reflect what excellent gills he or she used to have in fishy days.

It is well to remember that the mouth of man and his fellows is accidentally in the vicinity of his head. The mouth used to be much lower down, even in the stomach, and possibly it worked its way up in order to be nearer headquarters of intelligence. The eyes, nose and ears no doubt felt it would be better to accompany the mouth to commanding situation. If the eyes were in the knees, for example, a bow-legged man would be cross-eyed also.

A BOON TO ANGLERS.

A DECISION WHICH WILL, IT IS SAID, PROVE THAT FISH SHRINK.

[New York Tribune:] One of the mysteries of life is in a fair way, if not to be settled, at least to be judicially determined; and fortunately it is to be determined in the old commonwealth of Massachusetts, where the tradition of great judges like Shaw and great lawyers like Webster, with sporting blood in their veins, still survives and insures a decision which will be quoted not merely by advocates, but by anglers. Moralists have been wondering for ages what there was in the piscatorial art that seemed so surely to undermine habits of veracity. Honorable men who would not cheat another out of a match, or make to a greeting the conventional reply that they felt if by chance their gout was giving them twinges, could always be found taking three-pound fish from the water which at home never weighed more than two. No doubt Isaak Walton and his cook had very different ideas of the size of the king's foot, as measured by the length of the fish he gave her to put on the fire. If she believed him when he said they were a foot long, she probably had reason to suppose that royalty was shod in boys' sizes.

As we say, this habit in fishermen of seeing fish larger than anybody else has been set down by the careless to mendacity. But a new searcher for truth seems to have hit upon another explanation, which not only does credit to humanity, but also opens up a new field for science. This person, who is described as a "gentleman farmer" in Greater Barrington and a stock broker in New York, having been arrested for catching trout under six inches in length, sets up the legal defense that the trout were six inches long when he caught them, but shrank while he had them in his basket on the way home. Now, if he can sustain this possibility of shrinking before the courts, we have a doctrine of great usefulness to all honest men who love fishing, but have reputations as clergymen, teachers and sober bankers to maintain. The raconteur of fish stories need never hereafter be disturbed by incredulous smiles when he holds his hands two feet apart to indicate the length of a bass which the auditors know was easily cooked as a pan fish. He can merely say in passing that it was an extraordinarily hot day and he never saw a fish shrink as that did.

The whole world of anglers owes a debt of gratitude to the Great Barrington fisherman. We hope he will get a judicial ruling, not only from the Superior Court, to which he has appealed, but from the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, that fish do shrink.

GARDEN NOW.

THE PRESENT TIME SHOULD BE ONE OF ACTIVITY.

By Ernest Braunton.

THE present should be the season of the greatest activity in gardening. Most things should be pruned at this time, lawns and plants fertilized, soil stirred, rubbish cleared away and plants and seeds put into the ground. A month or so later the value of such work is much less than if done at present. The only plants which should not be set out until later are those of a strictly tropical nature, most of which are foliage plants like cyperus, cannas, elephant's ears, etc. Another tropical root or bulb which should wait for another month is the dahlia.

Summer and autumn flowering bulbs should be planted at once, though such as the gladioli are best planted part now and the balance one and two months later. In regard to the latter, why plant the same kinds and colors each year? There is a fine strain of gladioli known as Groff's hybrids, originated in Canada, in which may be found some remarkable blues, yellows and a great variety of light tints. Of course they cost more to begin, but it will pay you in the end.

For the next few months wild flowers may be found from seashore to mountain top. Seeds of many of these are eagerly bought by the residents of other States and countries, for we have a large number of native plants of marked horticultural value. Why not make a note of the locality where these showy blooms are now in evidence that we may return later and gather the seeds or bulbs? Why not have a corner of your garden devoted to the growth of our own floral beauties? They are so much easier to start and care for than most foreign plants; do not, however, pluck all the flowers you find—seed gathering does little harm.

Now is the golden time for lawn fertilizing. Many use their stable manures on the lawn while they buy commercial fertilizer for flower and vegetable plots. This is altogether wrong. Stable manures generally contain more or less weed seeds, and these can be overcome by cultivation in the garden, but when they grow in the lawn, they must be pulled out one by one. So it is more economical to use commercial fertilizers on the lawn and the stable manures in the garden, where good, not harm, will result. All fertilizer works manufacture fertilizers for both lawn and garden which give good results. People are more and more, each year coming to realize that commercial fertilizers are foods, not medicine, and the very best grades of plant food, too.

Beware of Nasturtiums.

Many unthinking people enthuse over nasturtiums because of the extreme ease with which they can be grown in our climate. They surely are a good flower for the very poor, and the very lazy, giving grand results for the least expenditure of time or money. In many sections, and under certain conditions, they are to be recommended, but in the well-tilled, well-irrigated garden they are a source of constant annoyance, if not of real danger to more valuable plant life. Many complaints reach this department that after the first seeds are ripe, the plants become a pest, springing up in all sorts of places during every month in the year. Where the seeds have lodged among thickly-growing vegetables or ornamental bedding plants they are certainly to be ranked as a pest.

Lilacs in Southern California.

An "Interested Reader" writes to complain that she cannot grow lilacs here as she did in the "Eastern States," and wishes to know the proper conditions of soil and climate.

The writer has planted many lilacs, under varying conditions, has made a study of them locally for nearly twenty years, but without solving the problem of their successful growth. The most successful seems to be those grown on an exceptionally well-drained soil, in a rather cold exposure, and where they are rested for a time each year. Seeing that all privets (Ligustrum) do well in our land, it would be an interesting experiment to try budding different species and varieties of lilacs into them; some exceptionally good results might be obtained. Lilacs are very easily placed on privet stock either by budding or grafting.

The Gold Dust Plant.

The beautifully spotted Aucuba Japonica makes one of the very best of tub, pot or garden plants for shaded, well-drained positions and of late years has again come strongly into public favor. Some years ago it was common enough in and about Los Angeles, but until a recent importation of large plants arrived from Belgium it was scarcely to be found in local nurseries for several years past.

Plants on Tropical Trees.

Saphrophytal orchids are those whose sole habitat is the bark of trees. The dead bark of trees does not constitute the nutriment of all the plants which grow from trunks and branches or climb up them in the form of clinging and twining lianas. Often the trees only serve as supports, by means of which the plants in question raise themselves out of darkness into light. Such food-salts as they require they take, not from their support, but from the earth, into which they send absorption roots.

As years go by, a quantity of inorganic dust collects in the forks of branches, and in the little rents and fissures in the bark of old trees, and this dust gets mixed with crumbled particles of bark. The clefts, therefore, are more or less full of vegetable mold, and this forms an excellent foster soil for a large number of plants. But it is not necessarily the case that all plants rooting in this mold take up organic matter, or organic compounds from it. Thus one finds not infrequently in the angles on the trunks, etc., of old trees such and other plants; which might have germinated there from fruits brought by birds, and other ways. But with this exception of instances, the great majority of plants nestling in the mold in crevices of bark, do take nutriment from this, their substratum in the form of organic compounds. In cold regions the plants living in the mold of bark are for the most part mosses and liverworts. In the tropics, on the other hand, the fissured bark of trees is a rallying ground not only for delicate mosses and moss-like plants, but also for a whole host of ferns and vivid flowering plants. The number of small ferns which develop and unroll their fronds from chinks in the bark of trees is so great that old trunks appear wrapped in a regular foliage of fern-fonds.

The Gum Arabic Tree.

Several species of [illegible] cia yield this gum in common. It is obtained [illegible] them by spontaneous exudation from the trunk [illegible] branches, or by incisions made in the bark, whence [illegible] flows in a liquid state, but soon hardens by exposure [illegible] the air. The bark, known as babool bark, is [illegible] astringent, and is used for tanning. WORK FAIRLY STARTED AND WILL SOON BE WELL UNDER WAY.

AT last Los Angeles is to be fairly started in school gardens. Last year the energetic garden committee from the women's clubs got the work fairly under way. This year they have started in early, and soon school gardens will be flourishing in the Grand Avenue and Utah Street schools. In this work the Board of Education is doing a little to help, but it is earnestly hoped that another year the expense of this necessary work will be borne entirely by the city. We believe that the average citizen is thoroughly awake to the necessity of having school gardens, yet the financial support has been very disappointing, heart-rending, in fact. The local seedsmen and plantsmen have been very generous; so has the city park department and many individuals. All needed seeds, plants, etc., have been cheerfully donated, but funds are needed to pay for labor and other material. Self-sacrificing women in charge of the work are doing all that energy and enthusiasm can accomplish, but they are sometimes disheartened by the gigantic task before them when they stop to consider the limited means at their disposal.

Norfolk Island Pine in Prospect Park.

The educative value of school gardens is unquestioned and the knowledge and experience gained at school will soon cause such work to be transplanted to the home grounds. Through this medium we shall soon have more beautiful home grounds and, of course, a more beautiful city. Work so far-reaching in results should receive every encouragement, especially if it will tend to educate our citizens to a sense of their liabilities in the way of civic betterment. One of the things our people need to have impressed upon them is that civic ugliness is a liability, one that brings upon us many reproaches. Encourage the school gardens, for largely through their influence may we expect to see future generations living amid more wholesome surroundings in our towns and cities.

For Country Roadsides.

For an evergreen tree having both decorative and economic value we know of nothing better than the carob tree or algaroba. The botanical name is Ceratonia Siliqua. The leaves are large, pinnate, glossy green, and evergreen. It grows to be forty or fifty feet high and has a broad, spreading top. The fruit is a legume, that is, like a large bean, and makes excellent stock food. It is probably best known locally as St. John's bread. Bailey's Cyclopedia says: "The last name records the notion that the seeds and pulp are respectively the locusts and wild honey which St. John found in the wilderness. The dry valves or pods have been supposed to be the husks which became the subsistence of the prodigal son."

This tree is peculiar in that it has but one kind of a flower on a tree and none of the flowers are perfect. If one tree has female flowers, it has no male flowers, and vice versa, hence both kinds of trees must be in close proximity or no fruit will be produced. When seedlings are planted, an equal number of each kind is likely to be produced. After the trees come into bloom, part of the male trees can be grafted over to the other kind if desired. The trees should be trained to a central stalk until they become six or eight years old, that is, a central stalk should be encouraged or the side limbs will grow at the expense of the central stock and the trees will become squatty. The fruit of this tree is very rich and the trees very productive. The pods average about seven inches long and an inch wide. It is nearly all pulp, the seeds being very small. The pulp has something of the flavor of the date and is relished by all kinds of animals. This in conjunction with its highly ornamental character, ought to be just what our semi-arid sections need. One other recommendation for it is that it requires very little water, being a native of arid regions, and is unusually drouth-resistant.

Conifers for Street Trees.

We are often called upon to condemn the practice of planting conifers (cone-bearing trees) for street purposes, as but a very small percentage of them look well when so used, being too dark and somber in appearance. Still fewer present a pleasing appearance when denuded of their lower branches. "Gardening in California" says: "Conifers are frequently used for street planting, but as language is not strong enough to condemn the impropriety of their use for this purpose, no further attention is accorded them here. . . Public convenience demands the removal of all the lower branches for a height of eight or ten feet of trees that align a sidewalk or public highway. As the exquisite beauty of most conifers depends entirely upon the integrity of the lower limbs, the impropriety of planting any tree subject to these requirements becomes apparent. A notable exception can be made in the way of a boulevard of imposing width—not less than one hundred and twenty feet. On such an avenue or driveway a central line of Monterey pines may be tolerated." All our recognized authorities seem to be consistently unanimous in the condemnation of the use of conifers for street planting.

Oaks for Street Planting.

Oaks seem to be as fully favored for planting along streets in the Eastern United States as they are in California. The editor of "Floral Life," Philadelphia, a most excellent authority, answering the query, "What kind of trees will do well in cities?" says: "For city sidewalks, nothing succeeds better than oak. The well-worn cry that they are slow of growth is absurd. No one will deny that they are not the most rapid growing trees, but they do make a good, moderate growth. It must be remembered, too, that trees should be chosen for their permanent value and not for what comforting shade they will give the first three years. The hasty selection of a rapid growing tree, regardless if its lasting qualities, is sure to bring regret."

Venezuelan Ethnology.

A STUDY OF PRESENT AND PREHISTORIC RACES.

From a Special Correspondent.

CARACAS, Jan. 2.—In Venezuela the study of existent and prehistoric races is still in its incipiency. Rich in possibilities, it offers to the anthropologist a magnificent new field in which to make valuable discoveries.

There is but little doubt that Venezuela at the time of the arrival of Christopher Columbus was populated by divers groups of unequally civilized Indians belonging to the one great race prevalent throughout the New World. The belief that the population of Venezuela pertained to a race radically different from other Indians seems to be wrongly founded. This is due to the very superficial hypothesis that distinctions in grades of civilization account for or identify different races.

Venezuela certainly had a great number of tribes, all differing greatly, some so pronouncedly distinct from the others as to appear to belong to other human races. But there is hardly any scientific speculation as to their common origin. The population of Venezuela at one time comprised many Chilcha, Inechua and Simaro tribes of the Andean Cordillera, Caribs, Arnacos and Miranhas of the upper Amazonian system, Salivas, Guahivos, Piaroas, Guaraunos and others of the Orinoco regions, Bumeras and Cumanagotes on the Caribbean coast and Motilones, Paranjanos and Gojiros in the Maracaibo Basin, between all of which relations existed proving a similarity of origin. The diversity of this human agglomeration having different grades of civilization as well as especial characteristics no more argues that they belonged to distinct races of men than do the notable differences among the Aztecs, Mayas, Chilchas and Incas, considered from the standpoint of culture, argue that they they are not one and the same race. The dissimilarity of the tribes simply adds interest as showing the rise and fall of humanity without regard to homogeneity or propinquity.

There was a wide range of difference in color among the Venezuelan tribes, running from the yellow of the Asiatic to the coppery red of the North American aborigine and from fair to black. At the present time there are whole tribes of white Indians on the headwaters of the Orinoco and of black Indians at the mouth of that river.

Comparative philology of the tribes is very interesting as showing that new languages were formed among them in short spaces of time. The linguistic identification of tribes living within a few miles of each other was rendered highly difficult because of the total dissimilarity of tongues. Grammar was transformed with extraordinary promptitude.

Physiologically or physically the tribes differed greatly. Certain tribes, the Boquimanes, Andamanes and Tubanes in the Temalameque region were remarkable for their small brain capacity, as is shown by skulls recently accidentally found at Chita, Gramelote and Chinocotoque, while others, such as the Uramas, living at a distance of but eighty miles from the Boquimanes, had craniums of extraordinary size. Skulls of the Uramas would fit loosely over the heads of modern men. The structure of the facial bones was such as to indicate that the physiognomy of a Urama would compare with that of a man of these days as an ordinary man's face with that of a boy twelve years old. That the bodies of the Uramas were in proportion with their heads is demonstrated by thigh bones usually found with the skulls.

About 20 per cent. of the skulls of the Venezuelan aborigines were perfectly differentiated with the Inca bone. This shows very conclusively that the Venezuelans of old were of the same racial trunk as the Peruvians and the Arizona cliff dwellers. In many of these skulls lesions indicate the existence of the disease Lues Venerea among Venezuelans a thousand years ago.

Skulls recently discovered at Convencion show that the genuine Mongolian eye was not so rare among the aboriginal tribes of the Orinoco as been claimed by historians.

Some vestiges of the industry of the passed and passing tribes are to be found. These indicate that the standard of living was higher in the interior than along the coasts, although chroniclers have always claimed that the interior of Venezuela was the most uncivilized part of the new world.

It appears that in the heart of the country agriculture was developed more extensively than on the coasts. The inhabitants knew the art of utilizing the slopes of the hills by making systems of shelves for the retention of moisture. Their habitations, both hanging and [illegible] were fairly comfortable. They made tools and kitchen utensils and manufactured cotton cloths. Ceramic art was advanced among them. Granaries and underground chambers for storage of potatoes were built by them, and they obtained salt by various means of evaporation, including artificial.

One of the most notable of the contrivances of the Guahivos was a clay lamp moulded by some process which gave it sufficient consistency to serve for the burning of cacao oil for illuminating purposes. It was artistically and solidly constructed. There are also stone cylinders in the forms of axles found in the Goajira region. This shows that wheels for vehicles were not unknown to the Goajiros.

In the State of Merida there are many hills which have been evidently utilized for agricultural purposes after the system of the Ondens of Peru. These sug the Muisca civilization was early introduced and long maintained among the Motilones.

Social conditions throughout aboriginal Venezuela followed the forms set by Muisca government. But there are no reputable proofs that the Muiscal civilization predominated. Indeed it may be asserted that all along the coast, especially in the eastern parts, where there were many settled and wandering tribes, the Caribs completely dominated, and there remains nothing determinative of any other state of affairs except the absolute barbarism regnant in the wilderness.

In the religion generally prevalent there was a certain amount of mystic refinement similar but not equal to that of Mexico and Peru. A convent for Indian nuns existed at Aricagua, in the Andean region, there were many establishments in the Orinoco country, where virgins were encloistered and there were temples for vestals of the sun, which was worshiped.

Venezuelan mythology united the beauty of conception to the amplitude of propensity as is demonstrated by tales and traditions. The legends known by the titles of the "Five White Eagles," "The Five Bald Mountains" and "The Five Hoary Heads" are among the most beautiful heard in South America. They are recounted at the present day in all parts of Venezuela except the cities.

But 900 natives of Venezuela still speak the primitive languages. The disappearance of the aborigines, therefore, affords subject for investigation far more serious than elsewhere.

Father Gumilla in his volume on the Orinoco region estimated the population of Cundinamarca province at one time at 25,000,000. At the present time Cundinamarca may be said to be depopulated. Rodriguez Freire, in his account of his expedition to Pamplona, stated that he passed through a city as extensive as Rome. A journey through those regions now would make the relation of the stories that the Venezuelan [illegible] were once populated by millions appear fabulous. Yet it is unreasonable to doubt them.

What were the causes of the extermination?

The least sensible explanation is that given by Federmann and supported by Oviedo y Baños. Finding ruined cities along the Apure River the German explorer made inquiries and learned that carnivorous serpents of great size lived in the river and ate the inhabitants. In the end, so numerous became the monsters, the people abandoned the cities and moved to other localities. Federmann claims to have heard the roarings of the serpents and affirms that his soldiers saw them from a distance.

However incredible this may be, it is quite true that during the past generation the valley of the River Pinuale, in Guayana, has been abandoned by the Indians because of the presence of an enormous ophidian in the waters.

It is but natural that Spaniards should attempt to vindicate themselves after the universal devastation characteristic of their conquest. In consequence, Father Romero y Zamoro insists that the aboriginal race of Venezuela disappeared because of provoked sterility. He states that long before Malthus taught his doctrines in Europe he had refined precursors in Venezuela and that the aborigines used substances which suspended or annulled the physiological functions.

In his history Father Gumilla relates that all through the Orinoco region mothers put to death their girl infants because they considered females as unfortunates in that they were doomed to cultivate the fields, weave and drudge, while the males treated them with great cruelty and abandoned them when they became old and useless. This priest adds that during the Spanish conquest mothers were not satisfied with killing the girls alone, but put the boys also to death so that they might not become slaves. He remarks that infanticide was for centuries a well-established custom.

Many Venezuela doctors believe that the extermination was brought about by epidemic diseases such as smallpox, measles, etc. Others insist that tuberculosis, to which Indians are very susceptible, wrought the greatest ravages. Alcoholism is said to have caused many tribes to perish, and even leprosy, another imported evil—which, it is said, however, that the Indians knew how to cure 500 years ago—is held to account for the disappearance of the Bucares.

Some writers try to prove that the Venezuelan natives were wiped off the earth for the crime of eating human flesh. They argue that all cannibal tribes are doomed to disappear.

There is no doubt that cannibalism has been very prevalent in Venezuela. Anthropophagy is distinctly Caribbean. The Caribs ate their fallen enemies, whether Indians or Spaniards. Arancos did likewise. When anti-cannibals became too numerous, Caribs and Arancos united through affinity. They banqueted together in peace and enjoyment.

Although ever since first discovered, the Caribs have been considered as a race apart, having come from Central America and the Lesser Antilles, it is not right to make any exception of them. They were by nature cannibalistic and born with a spirit for conquest on land and sea. Daring navigators, they penetrated to the Amazon. They left traces of their language throughout Colombia, Venezuela and the Caribbean Archipelago. But they were from the same racial trunk as the other Venezuelan tribes, and were closely related to the Andeans, who have never been accused of cannibalism.

The very fact that the Caribs, the most notorious of cannibals, survived all the other tribes of Venezuela, should be enough to refute the argument that cannibalism was the cause of the perishing of the millions of the country's primitive inhabitants.

Perhaps all the afflictions mentioned contributed to the destruction of the aborigines, but certain it is that the main cause was the Spanish conquest. The declaration that the indigenous Indian has not disappeared, but has simply been absorbed in the present population, is absurd. Only the inferior tribes who owed life to flight or submission have been absorbed. The superior Indians, such as the Caracas and the Araguas, which would very likely have advanced rapidly in civilization if they had come in contact with any other race but the Spanish of the sixteenth century, disappeared completely during the war of conquest.

It is only too true, too bitterly true, that conquering peoples destroyed those whom they subjugated. The Spaniards with steel and fire, with the slavery of the mines and atrocities of dogs of chase swept away by thousands the lives of the aborigines.

During the Spanish conquest the two races, Venezuelans and Spaniards, distinct in mentality as well as ethnology, engaged in a death struggle. When the Indians of Mexico and Peru, where they had already possessed a civilization, fell before the Spaniards like gauze before a gale, it could not be expected that the Venezuelans, whose social conditions were inferior to those of all other Indians, could long resist. Before the scourge of extermination known as the conquest, represented by such agents of devastation as Alfinger, the bewildered aborigines perished not by thousands, but by millions. The river monsters could not have consumed them as did the breath of Spanish conquest, poisonous, corrupting and all-corroding.

The disappearance of th autochthonous racs of Venezuela was reduced to a slaughter.

The Merritt Family.

ITS RECORD BEARS OUT MEANING OF THE NAME.

By a Special Contributor.

MERRITT is a name derived from the Anglo-Saxon word maer, or maera, meaning renowned, illustrious. In French, the name is Meret. Variations of the English form are Merrett, Merrit, Meritt, and one of the compounds is Meriton.

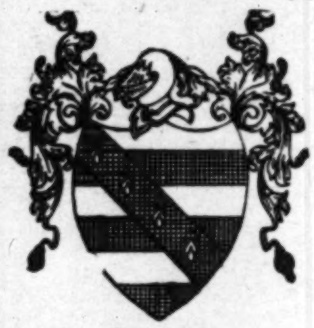
Nearly 2000 years B.C. we read of Queen Merit Amen, but she can hardly be regarded as founder of the family.

The plant genus Merrettia—one of the algae—helps to perpetuate the name. This was so called by the botanist Gray, in honor of Christopher Merret, of London, physician, writer and botanist. His collection of plants is preserved in the English herbarium, and his catalogue of plants is in the British Museum. He was the son of Christopher of Gloucestershire, and born in 1614.

Pilgrim fathers were Ezekiel, whose name is found in Rhode Island records, 1639. Henry, of Kent, England, came to America before 1628 and became a large landed proprietor in Massachusetts. He had two sons, John and Henry, residents of Scituate.

James Merritt was a resident of Boston, 1655.

One of the proprietors and founders of Rye, Westchester county, N.Y., was John Merritt, who came from Kent, England, in 1680. With his wife Glorianna he afterward removed to Newburgh.



Merritt

Another with proprietor's rights at Rye was Thomas, surveyor, who was on the commission to settle the boundary line between Rye and Greenwich. He was also one of the commission to build the meeting-house, and selected minister. He was born in Connecticut, where he was deputy to the general court, and where he married, in 1867, Abigail Francis. Besides property at Rye, he owned land at White Plains.

Another pilgrim father was William Merritt, navigator, born in England. He came to New York in 1671 in command of a ship, and then abandoned the sea to become a merchant. He was a prominent man in affairs in New York City. In 1681 he was Alderman; ten years later he was Mayor of the city. He bore the title of lieutenant, and was one of a committee to provide material for fortifications of the city. In 1695 he and other members of the Church of England petitioned for leave to buy land to build a church. This was Trinity Church, which he helped to build, and he and his son were its first vestrymen. Toward procuring funds for building he asked that the money collected for ransoming slaves be paid over to the committee, "as some of said Christians are dead and others have escaped."

William Merritt afterward removed to Orange county, being one of the founders of that branch of the family.

The New Jersey branch dates back to Samuel, John and Darius, who settled in Morris county in 1774.

Nathaniel, of Westchester county, Surveyor and Tax Collector, removed to Nova Scotia. His son Jesse, also a surveyor, became a member of the Society of Friends. It was the bright eyes of Mary Cornelius, a Quaker maiden, that first attracted him to this religious body. Their marriage certificate, still preserved, bears the names of nearly thirty witnesses. It is dated 1789. They "declared their intention of marriage with each other before two meetings at Westbury, Long Island, according to the good order used among them, and having the consent of parents and nothing appearing to obstruct, was approved by said meeting."

The Merritts have always been among the first to range themselves on the side of liberty. One of the earliest, if not the earliest, protests against imposts was that of 1669, and we find among the signers Samuel Merritt of Marblehead, Mass.

The list of soldiers in Philip's war gives the names of John Merrit and John Merrett. Another John—the name seems to have bestowed a warlike spirit—was with "the flower of Essex," under Capt. Lathrop, September 18, 1675.

Joseph Merritt, son of Thomas, of Rye, was ensign in the Westchester county militia, 1722. The roster of New York State troops of the Revolution gives the names of Amosa Merritt, corporal; Sylvanus, drummer, with a long line of privates.

In the good old times, when large families were the rule rather than the exception, the Merritts had olive branches to boast of, and biblical names abounded. We find Noah, Isaac, Joshua, Jonathan, Elisha and Malachi. Skipping over into the New Testament, there was Luke and Barnabas—these all brothers. In another family we have Patty and Polly and Billy.

Notable members of the family are Edwin Merritt, of Vermont, Consul-General to London. He was a descendant of Henry, who came from Kent, and, on his mother's side, of Henry Rogers, a martyr to religious persecution, having been burned at the stake in 1554. Edwin Merritt removed from Vermont to St. Lawrence county, N. Y.

Timothy Merritt of Connecticut, born 1775, had fame as preacher and writer.

The artist of the family was Henry Merritt, of London, whose wife, Anna Lea, was also an artist, or she became one after her husband's death.

Writing his biography, to supply a portrait, she studied the art of etching, which led to her adopting it as a profession.

The Merritt arms, reproduced, is barry of six, argent and sable, a bend ermines. It was borne by the Christopher Merrett, and said to have been granted to him in 1666. It is possible that he inherited it, for arms of this description, so simple in character, belong to very ancient times.

Meritts, of Wiltshire, bear a barry of six or and sable, a bend ermines.

Fairbairn gives a crest for Merrett, viz., out of a ducal coronet, a demi-salmon. But it is not stated to which branch it belongs. John Merrett, of Rye and Newburgh, bore the arms here reproduced, and the same is seen cut upon a Merritt tombstone in St. John's churchyard, Providence, R. I.

When a shield is crossed by bars it is called barry of so many, first naming the color at the top of the shield. The object in parting a shield by various lines seems to have been to use two colors. Unless the symbolism of the colors is recognized the arms would be meaningless.

Nisbet points out in his Heraldry that arms divided by partition lines took origin from parti-colored coats, which were worn as garments when heraldry first came into being. Favorite emblematic colors of different knights were thus displayed in striped or banded patterns.

At first heraldic bearings were worn on a surcoat above the arms, and so portions of the verture became connected with the coat of arms, such as the furs, ermine, for example, and the scarf, or shield suspender, which became the bend, these figures being transferred to the shield itself.

The bend is a bearing of high honor, signifying defense or protection, and was granted to those who had distinguished themselves as commanders. Shakespeare's arms display a bend.

The wearing of fur in olden times was considered a particular mark of dignity, and it could not be emblazoned upon the arms of a person of inferior rank. When Innocent III granted absolution to Henry of Falconberg for some grave offense one penance was that he should never appear in a fur or any other armorial color made use of in tournaments.

Furs, still an emblem of dignity, are worn on the hoods of collegiate graduates as bearing of honor.

Regarding symbolism of the tinctures and colors of the Merritt arms, argent or silver signifies peace and sincerity; sable or black, constancy; or gold generosity and elevation of mind.

ELEANOR LEXINGTON.

WOMEN AND PAIN—A MAN'S THEORY.

The man, when his tooth was pulled, yelled hoarsely. The next patient, a woman, bore the pain of three extractions with silent fortitude.

"Yes," said the dentist, "women endure the pangs of tooth-pulling better than men, but they deserve no praise on this account. They feel the pain less.

"Experiments have frequently been made," he went on, "to test the acuteness of the masculine and feminine senses. The last experiments were made in this town, and they were interesting and conclusive.

"First, taste was tried. The male subjects could detect in water the presence of the sixtieth part of a grain of gall. The women couldn't distinguish the gall in a smaller quantity than the twentieth of a grain. The men's taste was three times keener than the women's.

"Next smell. The men smelt the presence of the hundredth part of a grain of prussic acid. The women were unconscious of the acid till a quantity of five times greater was set before them. In smell the men were five times the women's superiors.

"Men heard a watch ticking at a distance of ten yards; women could only hear it at a distance of two yards. The males, again, you see, were five times the better.

"It was the same thing with sight and with touch. The men saw five times better. They felt five times more keenly and delicately.

"These experiments explain away the apparent anomaly of woman's wondrous fortitude to pain. Woman's senses being less acute, she is less affected by pain than man."

A Winter Outing.

HAPPY VACATION DAYS SPENT AT LA JOLLA.

By a Special Contributor.

"ALL things come to him who waits," murmured Anastasia as we settled ourselves comfortably on the shady side of the car.

"Even vacations," I assented with a sigh of perfect contentment.

"It really doesn't make so very great a difference," monologued Anastasia, "in the semi-tropical climate of Southern California, even though one's outing be postponed until midwinter. The main thing is that we are to have one at all."

At the conductor's cry of "All aboard!" and the sudden puffing and clanging of the little dummy engine, the cover of a hamper, which was wedged into the seat between us, began to heave tumultuously. Anastasia, bending low, whispered words of assurance to the occupant, which was no more nor less than—I name it in fear of your downright disapproval—a large, black cat, possessing a pair of magnificent emerald green eyes.

When but a preternaturally solemn kitten in a painful state of emaciation, he had appeared in a mysterious manner at our door, we adopted him forthwith for the selfish and superstitious reason that a black cat is supposed to bring good luck to those with whom he takes up his abode.

Having grown to a large and remarkably handsome cat, endowed with such qualities of mind and heart as to make him seem almost "a human being in disguise, with virtues raised to the ninth power," Anastasia said that "no amount of adverse criticism would induce her to throw him on the mercy of a cold world, while we went seeking pleasure."

As she voiced my own opinion of the matter, Sir Thomas, for we had given to him this knightly sobriquet, traveled with us in humble and surreptitious manner.

A journey of an hour's duration brought us to the famous little seaside resort, La Jolla, our chosen destination.

As we stepped from the car onto the platform of the little station, our eyes rested on the Pacific Ocean, deeply, beautifully blue, and showing long lines of snowy, foaming breakers. The hills and cañons were clothed in vivid green, and birds sang everywhere, while recent showers, together with the ocean breeze, gave to the air a purity and bracing effect quite indescribable.

It was with difficulty, after the contemplation of so much loveliness, that we could attend to the prosaic duty of bargaining with a real estate agent for a temporary rooftree. We finally chose a quaint and picturesque house known as the "littlest" one in town. By the noon hour, we found ourselves domiciled in the midst of our rented lares and penates.

Sir Thomas showed his approval of our choice by jumping onto the settle and with a finely discriminating eye selecting the softest pillow against which to stretch at ease. The kettle sang merrily. A delicious aroma of coffee escaped from a package on the kitchen table. The subtle combination of woman, a cat and a teakettle had created an instantaneous home atmosphere.

After busying ourselves in arranging our personal belongings about the three tiny rooms and attending to the duties which follow upon getting settled, we sallied forth to our mere scrap of a front piazza, to get our bearings, as it were.

"Look!" cried Anastasia. Obedient to her command, I saw a tent—not that tents were unusual, many sojourners in La Jolla preferring them to houses—but the close proximity of this one, it being not two blocks away, and the rapidity with which it had sprung up astonished us.

As we gazed, a man and a dog emerged therefrom. "He unfolded his tent like the Arabs, and as silently came to stay," gaily misquoted Anastasia. "And what an Adonis, too!" she continued.

"Adonis or not," I replied with considerable asperity, "I hope he will keep his distance and not spoil our one blessed vacation. But of what avail are human hopes? Anastasia, being adorably young and charming, attracts to herself innumerable admirers, which causes me, her elder sister and sole guardian, to assume the part of a meddlesome chaperon. And very thankful I am to be plain and unattractive, when I see what trouble is entailed by being otherwise.

The inevitable acquaintance with the Man of the Tent began in a most violent and unexpected manner. As he was passing by, the dog, a mere puppy, after the manner of his kind, dashed up our path on a tour of investigation, which resulted in a head-on collision with Sir Thomas, who sat daintily sniffing the salt air. The result was that the dog received a rebuke in the way of a stinging slap, which so frightened him that in sheer terror he leaped through the open window into our living-room.

Hastening to the door, a scene of decastation met our vision. A custard, which had been set in the window to cool, trickled across the floor in a creamy, yellow rivulet, while the dish which had held it lay in fragments. Under the settle, cowered the dog, seemingly transfixed by the hypnotic gaze of Sir Thomas, who was indulging in occasional conversational and long-drawn-out m-e-o-w-s.

"You wretched beast!" wailed Anastasia, "you've dashed our hopes for dessert—and eggs at 4 cents apiece, too."

In more practical fashion, I tried to dislodge the culprit by a vigorous shooing, scatting and shaking of skirts. Suddenly a clear whistle sounded on the air, the dog, gathering his forces, again leaped through the window, this time to life and liberty.

I fell to scooping up the delectable mess with a spoon, in the midst of which labor I was startled by a footstep at the door, and a pleasant voice saying: "I fear that my dog Remus has caused you a great deal of trouble."

"You might know," I paused long enough to say, "that a dog with that name would jump over window sills or something, if he couldn't find any Roman walls standing about handy.

Anastasia, in reparation for what she called my "unpardonable rudeness," took upon herself the performance of the amenities required by the occasion. She smiled, and dimpled, and looked so entirely bewitching that I could have slapped her with good grace. She [illegible] so far as to invite him to be seated in the [illegible] which so aroused my sense of chaperonage, [illegible] of a prolonged conversation, that I interposed [illegible] no; don't sit in that chair, it's—it's liable to fall [illegible] any minute."

This brilliant improvisation had the desired [illegible] The Man of the Tent took his departure. But, alas! [illegible] willed that he should indulge in many repetitions [illegible] that act.

It came about as things will sometimes, one [illegible] seeming to lead to another. At the close of a [illegible] day he would, like as not, escort us to the top of [illegible] Soledad, an immense bluff overlooking the village [illegible] panorama which unfolds to the vision from this [illegible] is beautiful beyond words. As far westward as [illegible] can reach, rolls old ocean, reflecting in a marvelous [illegible] ner, the mauve and rose, the azure, and the [illegible] gold and crimson tints of a winter sunset in Cal[illegible] To the east, show long ranges of purple mountains [illegible] a patchwork of green meadows and fields of yellow [illegible] ble. Many a tramp did we take over the mesa, [illegible] and down the cañons, fragrant with sage brush [illegible] beautiful wild flowers. Of these we would gather [illegible] armfuls, with quantities of exquisite maidenhair [illegible] which if bought from a florist would have cost a [illegible] fortune. Here, too, the meadow lark would [illegible] tuneful lay, while perchance, from the topmost [illegible] a straggling eucalyptus tree, a mocking bird would [illegible] forth a song of piercing sweetness. Little [illegible] and ground squirrels whisked saucily about, [illegible] gether the scene would indeed be quite idyllic.

Directly after heavy showers, when the mushrooms [illegible] which La Jolla is famous, were at their best, [illegible] forth at rosy peep of dawn, on a hunt for [illegible] ible fungi. To me it seemed a fool's errand, [illegible] am averse to mushrooms, but I prefer to buy [illegible] the boy who brings them to the door at a C[illegible] hour.

Right under my coldly forbidding eye—being [illegible] and plain, I can but look askance at the pretty [illegible] which lovers will commit—did the Man of the Tent [illegible] Anastasia's little hand, which in turn held [illegible] room, or—toadstool, which? To this day [illegible] doubt, for looking into her eyes, he repeated [illegible] lowing words:

"She plucked the little domes with fingers [illegible]
And tenderly the nestling buttons reft
From their green, cosy beds; and right [illegible]
She strayed to glean the meadow's snowy [illegible]

long-bedraggled maiden, it is safe to assume that he is far gone in love. I would say that this knowledge comes by proxy, not through personal experience, and glad enough I am that it is so.

Nature must have been in most daring and audacious mood when she lavished upon this famous little resort such a wealth of caves, cliffs, and wild, fantastic scenery. We would sit on the rocks and watch with fascinated gaze the breakers roll in. They were especially magnificent after a storm. Surf bathing we indulged in nearly every day during our stay. So soft and balmy was the air that little children romped and paddled in the water.

During a storm at sea, "Cathedral Rock," already weakened and cracked in places, was undermined by the action of the angry waters and fell with a thunderous crash in ruins—which is a grievous pity, as it was a sight of more than passing interest.

Within a mile or so of La Jolla, from the far hills, to the water's edge, is situated the site of an old Indian village. To this interesting place did the Man of the Tent, laden with shovel and pick, and Anastasia, and myself with the luncheon, often wend our way. Right valiantly did we assist in the digging for relics, of which we found many at a depth of twelve feet or more, showing that it must have been centuries ago that the place was peopled.

We found rude mortars and pestles, which these Indians had, without doubt, used for the grinding of grain, and the vegetable paints and oils with which they decorated themselves; also, fragments of an olla, or water jar, shell ornaments, and so forth. Coals from bygone camp fires were plainly distinguishable and the surrounding earth and crumbling oyster and abalone shells lying in heaps, gave evidence that these savages knew a good thing when they saw it.

Clam digging, too, proved a great attraction. For the acquisition of a voracious appetite, intense fatigue, and a wholly disreputable appearance, I would commend the occupation of clam digging.

Quite before we realized it, the last day but one of our vacation rolled round, and Anastasia and I fell to planning how on the morrow we would set the "littlest" house in the same nice order in which we found it, preparatory to bidding a reluctant farewell to La Jolla, where for six happy weeks we had lived so intimately with nature.

The Man of the Tent dropped in to spend this last evening with us. Over the fire burning brightly in the quaint cobblestone grate, he obligingly toasted marshmallows, while Anastasia popped corn. Sir Thomas and the dog Remus, having cultivated a passive friendship, calmly tolerated each other's presence on the rug. It would have been a really homelike and pleasing picture had my heart not ached with the knowledge that here was more than a passing matter of calls, bonbons and flowers.

Now I don't mind telling you in the least that I arrived years ago at the age when a cup of tea is comforting, and the glasses perched upon my nose show not a tinge of "couleur de rose," yet, when I saw with what admiration the Man of the Tent gazed at Anastasia and noted her sweet and sudden shyness, I thought it might after all be rather pleasant to—but pshaw! what driveling nonsense.

A VENOMOUS BIRD.

Rpir N'Doob of New Guinea is the name not of a man, but of a bird—the only venomous bird that exists. That there should be one venomous bird is not strange; it is strange there are not many more than one; for birds, scientists say, are reptiles—prehistoric snakes that in the dim past put forth wings and sprouted feathers. So, since there are so many venomous serpents, it is natural enough that there should be one venomous bird, the Rpir N'Doob.

The Rpir N'Doob is held in fear in New Guinea, for it is singularly savage. It will not, when feeding, flee at a man's approach. It will, on the contrary, attack the man if he draws too near.

The Rpir N'Doob's venomous bite causes burning pain all over the body, convulsions and temporary blindness. Sometimes lockjaw sets in; then the patient dies.

For the Good of Jimmy.

The Unexpected Ending of a Conscientious Flirtation.

By a Special Contributor.

I CONFESS I was at a loss what to do. Here was Jimmy Rodney, the idol of my heart (though he never dreamed it), going to the races every afternoon, and losing every cent he had in the world, and with it every grain of sense he possessed. Coaxing was useless, argument futile, and threats—well, there was really nothing with which to scare him, since he professed to care for no one on earth but himself. He was without exception the cleanest, straightest fellow I have ever known, and his ownly vice was gambling. When that once got a hold on him, no power on earth could break its grip until he had gone the limit. I had fought it before and failed. This time I did not intend to fail.

I went to see Jean. Jean is my second cousin, but we never consider the second part, but call each other cousins. She was not at home. I didn't suppose she would be, because she never is. Probably one reason for this is that she is pretty. You take the prettiest girl you ever knew, and imagine her ten times prettier—but what is the use trying to tell you! Of course, it isn't simply that she is pretty (though in her case that is enough), but she is just right every way—and her eyes! They tease you, and mock you, and challenge you, and defy you, and once in a long, long time, they get soft and dewy, and then you had better look out, or you will make a blithering idiot of yourself. I did once.

But, anyway, I had just settled myself for the afternoon to wait for Jean, with a good cigar and a book, and had sent my devoted aunt back to her interrupted nap, when who should walk in but Jean herself? I was glad to see her. I was very glad to see her! Any man would have felt the same way, even if he hadn't been her cousin. But I am her cousin, and for once I was glad of it, for she came over and perched on the arm of my chair and kissed me. I don't know what I did with my book, or my cigar, or my hands either, for that matter, but she found where my hands were, and said I mustn't any more. So she put them back where she said they belonged, and talked as fast as possible, which is very fast indeed when it is Jean who is talking.

"I started out for a walk all alone. Yes, really," (for I had naturally looked surprised at this statement,) "and I had got as far as the little path through the edge of Echo Park, when all of a sudden I felt queer and lonesome. I didn't know what was the matter for a minute, and then I remembered that this was just where Fudge was run over by that horrid old auto last summer. I couldn't walk another step in that direction, so I turned right around and came home. I felt ready to cry, and I was so afraid there would be some one here to see me, and I was so glad when there was no one here but you. I have a bad attack of the blues, and I believe you can cure them, so please let's have a good old-fashioned chat. What brought you over today?" and Jean stopped quite out of breath, and gave me a chance to put in a word.

"To tell the truth, Jean, I came over to see if you would do me a favor."

Jean had recovered her breath.

"What sort of a favor, I wonder? I don't believe I ever did you a favor in my life. I can't remember that I ever did. That was always your part of the programme. Is it very much trouble? I feel so frightfully lazy this afternoon! But tell me what it is, anyway, and I'll do it, if it is within the range of my feeble talents."

"I don't think it would be hard (for you)," I said, "and I think in this instance the end would justify the means."

"That sounds dreadfully mysterious," Jean remarked, in rather a disgusted voice. "If it makes me feel as solemn as you look, I am quite sure I don't care to do it."

I laughed across at her, as I asked my "leading question."

"Jean, do you flirt?"

"Well, of all things! What a perfectly ridiculous question!"

"It was a trifle unnecessary," I admitted. "I'll change it. Do you think you could flirt to order, just to please a friend, you know?"

"No, I confess I don't 'know' what in the world you are talking about. Are you trying to quarrel with me, or have you really taken leave of your senses altogether?"

"Now, see here, Jean! I'm dead in earnest about this, even if it does sound foolish at first. Do you know young Rodney?"

Jean still looked mystified, but on the whole decidedly interested, as she nodded a silent affirmative.

"Well, the situation is just this. He is losing his head entirely over the races, and incidentally is losing all his money to boot. Maybe it isn't just fair to tell you this, but it is the only chance I see to help him."

"But I don't see what possible good I can do." This dubiously from Jean.

"Well, I do," I answered, emphatically. "You can run a counter-attraction, which will be sufficiently strong to bring him to his senses in more ways than one."

Jean looked offended, but I didn't appear to notice it.

"A man's head may not be of superlative importance," I went on, "and his bank account may be still less of a consideration, but when his heart is in danger, he suddenly realizes that both these are necessary if he is to win out."

Jean suddenly burst into ripple after ripple of laughter.

"The poor man! With no head and no heart and no money, would life be worth living?"

"But Jean," I objected, "that's not it at all. "By stealing his heart—temporarily——" I looked at Jean questioningly.

"Oh, certainly," she agreed, still laughing. "I would agree to return it, or 'something just as good.' "

"In that case you would simply be borrowing, you see, and not stealing at all," I argued.

"He might charge rent!" she suggested, in sudden alarm.

"Never fear! But he is quite likely to suggest that you keep it permanently."

"In which case he would expect some adequate return."

Although Jean would make no definite promise of assistance in the case of Rodney versus The Races, yet I left her that afternoon with the tacit understanding that she would try to play the little game, and I had not the slightest doubt of what the effect would be—I mean the effect on Rodney.

I certainly have no reason to complain of the way in which Jean proceeded to carry out my commission, for the effect was plain enough, although the means employed were veiled in mystery; at least, I couldn't tell for the life of me how she managed it. She never appeared to pay the slightest attention to him. Time and again I have seen her so engrossed in conversation with another man that poor Rodney had to make two or three attempts before he could gain her attention. How it happened that, a few minutes later, she was out in the moonlight alone with Rodney, I'm sure I can't in the least explain; but I'll warrant Rodney thought he had been exceedingly fortunate to have succeeded in persuading her to take that stroll. This was the attitude which she maintained throughout the whole affair, yet there was a curious mixture of earnestness through all her gay indifference, which was not like her, and which I did not understand.

At last, one day, I questioned her. She said she thought she had gained some influence over Rodney, and then she raised her eyes to mine, and I saw they were wet with unshed tears. This was an alarming symptom for Jean.

"Why, Jean, dear," I exclaimed, in sudden consternation, "you are not sorry so soon, are you? When you have so nearly completed the cure, too?"

She did not answer.

"Whatever happens," I went on, "you have no cause to reproach yourself. You have certainly never deigned a glance in his direction without due persuasion."

"Oh, it's not that you or any one will blame me, not even he himself, but my own conscience will condemn me," she answered, softly and sadly.

"But why? What have you done that you should regret?" I asked, still in the dark.

Jean didn't answer for several minutes. When she spoke, it was still very softly, with her eyes fixed on the distant landscape.

"I don't know that I can explain so that you will understand, but I will try. You know that a girl has to protect herself in a hundred little conventional ways. She has to learn to fence with words, to keep men from saying too much. Men are such inquisitive creatures! When they have met a girl a few times, they seem to imagine that they have a perfect right to know her deepest and most sacred thoughts and feelings. I have a good many friends, but very few of them know me. You know me better than any other man I have ever had for a friend, and you also know that most people think I live entirely on the surface of everything, because I am continually playing a part and hiding all my serious thoughts and convictions under a mask of frivolity. You are wondering what this has to do with James Rodney. I will tell you. For him I dropped the mask from the first, and he knows me as I really am, with a woman's feelings and convictions."

For answer, I took Jean's little, cold hand and laid it softly against my cheek.

"It won't hurt him," I said gently.

She turned and hid her face against my shoulder and sobbed. I knew then that my last hope was gone, if I ever could have been said to have really hoped.

"I'm afraid he cares a good deal," she said faintly.

"Then he will be very, very happy when he finds—that—you care too!" I couldn't quite control my voice. I tried to think how happy he would be, I tried to think how glad I was that she had given her heart to such a man. I ground my teeth together, and tried with all my might to take it as a man should, and be glad that she had come to me first, but I could feel nothing, think of nothing but the stifling pain in my own heart, which she must not guess, now or ever. I patted her softly as she sobbed in my arms, while I fought my battle.

She spoke, but her voice was so muffled I could not make out what she was trying to say, and bent my head closer to hear. Her arm crept around my neck and she whispered it in my ear between sobs.

"I—don't—love—him!"

This was plainly preposterous.

"Then why did you do it?" I murmured, incredulously.

"You asked me to," she explained, haltingly, "so I did it the way I thought you would like to have me, and I tried not to let him care too much."

"Jean, darling," I cried, "look up at me!" She would not raise her proud little head, which was hidden in shame that she had at last let me guess her secret. But what did I care, as long as I held her a willing prisoner and could kiss her beautiful hair, and her dear little white neck, and the tip of one tiny pink ear? And so I occupied myself in perfect contentment until, of her own accord, she suddenly lifted her dear, flushed face and let me taste the sweetness of her lips.

Even Beggars!

JACOB RIIS, at a convention of school teachers at Atlantic City, decried contentment.

"There is too much contentment," he said. "Contentment is often a euphemism for conceit. It is through dissatisfaction and not through contentment with ourselves that we improve.

"Every man is too apt to be contented—that is, to be conceited—to think himself about as fine, and strong, and good, and wise, as any one in the world.

"Even beggars! Why, I know a gentleman who, on being accosted by a beggar, said:

" 'Why don't you go to work? Why do you waste your time begging?'

"The beggar drew himself up.

" 'Did you ever beg?' he said.

" 'No, of course not,' said the man.

" 'Then,' said the beggar, 'you don't know what work is.' "

The Patriot's Retort.

CORPORAL JAMES TANNER, commander-in-chief of the G.A.R., was condemning those who appear to regard the national uniform as a disgrace—those who object to seeing non-commissioned soldiers or sailors in the parquet of a theater or the restaurant of a fashionable hotel.

"Such people," said the veteran, "make me think of a recruiting sergeant whom I used to know in Richmondville—a true patriot.

"This sergeant, at the beginning of the Civil War, urged a rich man's son to enlist.

"The rich man's son sneered.

" 'Join the —— New York?' he cried. 'Not I! I'd rather enter a lunatic asylum than the —— New York.'

A Safe Bet.

MORRIS WOOD, the national skating champion, was discussing an absurd bet.

"This farmer, after a crop-selling trip to the city, found himself, with his wallet full of money, at the race track.

"The betting interested him a great deal. The enormous odds were almost incredible to his inexperienced mind. The idea of betting a dollar on a horse, and, if the horse won, getting $50 or $60 in return for it! There must certainly be some mistake, or some swindle.

"After a while the farmer walked up to a bookmaker and said:

" 'Look-a-here, friend, if that thar hoss Socks wins, an' I bet a dollar on it, do ye mean ter say ye gimme sixty?'

" 'That's what I do,' replied the bookmaker. 'I do that and more. It's a sixty-to-one shot, and you get, if Socks wins, $60, and your own original $1 back again, besides.'

" 'Then I'll take a chanst,' said the farmer firmly, handing up a silver dollar. 'But if I win, I'll be satisfied with the even sixty. Ye needn't give me my own dollar back unless I lose.' "

Ornithology vs. Finance.

A CERTAIN Pittsburgh millionaire visited Philadelphia not long ago, and his business leading him to the splendid Academy of the Natural Sciences, he found himself walking in and out among the cases of stuffed birds. There are thousands of lifelike feathered creatures gathered there, and the collection is considered one of the finest in America. The custodian could not help praising it all with excusable warmth.

"I've never figured it out," said he, at last, "but it is safe to say, at a guess, that these stuffed birds are worth not less than $200,000."

The Amateur Nurse.

MISS HELEN GOULD was inspecting a hospital in which she is interested.

At the end of the inspection, the nurse probationers, young and pretty and trim in their fresh uniforms, gathered about Miss Gould. They insisted on holding an impromptu reception in her honor.

Miss Gould praised the long and arduous course of study and practice that a nurse must take.

"I have no sympathy," she said, "with amateur nurses. A surgeon once told me a story that illustrates well the amateur nurse's skill.

"A young woman had taken some sort of correspondence course—nursing in three lessons—and thereafter went about looking for accidents, train wrecks, and runaways, wherein she might distinguish herself.

"Her search, one snowy afternoon, succeeded. Hurrying up to a crowd, she found a man prostrate and groaning. He had fallen on a hidden slide and broken his leg.

"At once she took the entire business into her own hands.

" 'A cane!' she said, and the bystanders quickly gave her one. She broke it in pieces for splints. She tore up her skirt for bandages. By the time the ambulance arrived, the injured man, pillowed on overcoats and bandaged in snowy linen, looked as though he had been under a great physician's hands.

"The ambulance surgeon, examining the patient, looked greatly impressed.

" 'Who,' he said, 'bandaged this limb?'

" 'I, doctor,' said the amateur nurse, blushing.

" 'Well,' said the surgeon, 'it is admirably done. But you have made, I find, a slight error.'

" 'What is that, doctor?' she asked.

" 'You have bandaged,' he answered, 'the wrong leg.' "

But He Swung His Lantern.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS tells a tale of the days when he was counsel for a railway line in one of the Southern States.

It appears that, at one point on its line, the company had stationed an old negro watchman, whose duties consisted in warning travelers down a highway crossing the tracks when a train approached. One night, a wagon belonging to a farmer was struck, resulting in a bad accident. The company was, of course, sued for damages, and, at the trial, the old darky was the principal witness for his employers. He replied to the questions put to him in a clear, direct fashion. Among these questions was one as to whether he was sure that he had swung his lantern across the road when he perceived the train approach. The negro replied:

"I shorely did, sah!"

The trial resulted in a verdict for the company, and Mr. Williams, as counsel, took early occasion to compliment the aged negro on his excellent testimony. To which the latter replied:

"Thankee, Marse John, but I was sorely skeered when dat lawyer man begin to ask me about de lantern. I was afeared, for a minute, dat he was goin' to ask me if it was lit or not. De oil done give out some time befo' de accident!"—[Success.

A NOBLE DOG THAT LAY DOWN HIS LIFE FOR HIS FRIEND.

By a Special Contributor.

THERE was a hint of coming summer in the crisp April air, and as old Mr. Thurston stepped down the city street he almost wished he had left his cane behind for once.

On a day like this he invariably thought his cane was not needed, though this delusion did not stay by him when, toward four in the afternoon he locked his office door and started for home. Then, indeed, when he felt anew the stiffness of his rheumatic limbs, he realized that the cane was his old and staunch friend.

When he reached Marble street he glanced about him with some impatience, peering above and below his glasses for another friend—young Giovanni, the newsboy.

For many and many a morning, through sleet and snow, through sun and shower, Giovanni had stood at his corner, waiting with a smile and a paper for Mr. Thurston.

But though Giovanni was not there, a little heap of scattered newspapers lay on the stone curbing where he had ought to have been. And the shabby brown bicycle cap Mr. Thurston espied among the papers was assuredly Giovanni's. Then where was the owner of the cap and the papers?

Mr. Thurston had begun to feel a great interest in the little Italian street gamin, ever since, six months ago, his ragged figure had begun to haunt the corner of Marble street, and his shrill cry of "Pipers! morning pipers!" had been heard.

He had no home and no parents, and as far as Mr. Thurston could discover, no name but Giovanni. The newsboys called him "Johnny the Dago," but Mr. Thurston clung to the smoother syllables of Giovanni, and the boy seemed to like this better.

Giovanni was ten years old, or thought he was, and had the soft, dark eyes and swarthy olive skin of his race. His smile was bright and animated, and when it shone on Mr. Thurston every morning it was like the greeting of an old friend.

They really liked each other, these two—the crusty old lawyer (who, by the way, was not nearly so crusty as he looked,) and the grimy little urchin from the slums.

"Well, well!" muttered Mr. Thurston to himself; "where can that young rascal be, I wonder? Into some mischief, I'll be bound. Fighting, I suppose, though he looks as peaceable as a lamb."

In the very next instant Mr. Thurston found that his surmise had been correct, for Giovanni came bounding round the corner, panting, breathless, and dishevelled as only a boy who has been fighting can ever be.

In his arms was huddled a dingy black and brown cur, most mongrel in appearance. Hot at Giovanni's heels came, helter-skelter, three or four other newsboys, their faces distorted with anger and thwarted malice. The little dog was yelping shrilly and viciously, and the boys were shouting their almost unintelligible street gibberish. Altogether there was a pretty hubbub about the bewildered old lawyer.

Mr. Thurston understood the situation at a glance, and he raised his cane threateningly at the boys. They withdrew to a respectful distance, though the epithets they heaped upon his head were far from respectful. Finally, however, they slunk away one by one, and Mr. Thurston was left alone with the boy and the dog.

"Well, Giovanni," began the lawyer pleasantly, lowering his cane, "what's it all about?"

"Dem guys was foolin' with de dorg," Giovanni explained as well as he could, between breaths. "Dey was goin' to tie a tin can to his tail, but I wouldn't let 'em. So dere was a scrap. Dat's all. Gee! but dat dorg is a corker—he just backed up to de curb and showed his teeth at 'em; but he wouldn't run or anythin'. He's brave, he is. So I t'ought I'd help him out, 'cause dey'd have got holt of him sure, in a minute."

The little cur looked up with bright beady eyes of intelligence, as if he almost understood the high praise that was being lavished on him. Then he nestled closer in his protector's arms, and gave a gusty sigh of weariness and content.

"Ain't he cute?" asked Giovanni, stroking the frayed ears fondly.

"Cute?" repeated Mr. Thurston, with a vague stare. "Well, yes, perhaps he is. At any rate, I'm glad you helped him out of his dilemma. A tin can for an appendage would have been particularly humiliating, I imagine, to a courage and dignity as fine as this dog's."

Mr. Thurston's eyes twinkled, and Giovanni answered, "Yes, sir," not understanding in the least what he meant. Then the lawyer bought his morning paper and went on his way.

The next morning Giovanni was at his usual post, the proud owner of a dog; for the boy and the cur had evidently adopted each other. The dog was squatted behind the newsboy, watching the panorama of the street with a calm and judicial eye. But he was watching his new master, too, somewhat anxiously, as if he feared he might tire of his bargain at any moment and give him the slip. If Giovanni made a sudden sally down the street to meet or attract a customer, the dog jumped up and was after him like a shot.

"I'm goin' to keep him," Giovanni explained to Mr. Thurston. "He ain't got no home, yer see, and he seems kind of like me. Don't yer, Dewey? Yer like Johnny the Dago, don't yer?"

The dog jumped up and yelped, fawning upon his new master in a way which left no room for doubt. Indeed, if Dewey had been able to speak, he would most certainly have exclaimed, "I don't only like you, my young master, but I love you!!"

Mr. Thurston smiled sympathetically at both dog and master.

"Dewey?" he inquired. "Is that his name?"

"Dat's wot it is," said Giovanni, emphatically. "Dat's wot I'm going to call him, Mr. Thurston. Admiral Dewey was a hero, he was, an' so's dis dorg. If you'd a seen him yesterday, you'd say for sure he wasn't no slouch. I washed him last night at the fountain in de square, an' don't he jest look nice an' clean, dough? He's a beaut, an' no mistake."

If Mr. Thurston had any doubts as to Dewey's beauty, he kept them from the proud owner of the dog. But he admitted that Dewey was much cleaner, and even seemed a little fatter than yesterday.

"He was 'most starved, poor little dorg," Giovanni explained. "Yer oughter ha' seen him eat, Mr. Thurston. Gee! I thought he'd never stop."

"He's not going to be such a bad-looking dog when he gets fattened up," Mr. Thurston remarked, looking at Dewey with a critical eye. "And he seems very intelligent."

"You bet he is!" cried Giovanni. "He's de smartest dorg I ever clapped my eyes on."

"Well, I must be moving on. Take good care of Dewey, Giovanni—Dewey, the admirable."

"Bet I will, Mr. Thurston!" was Giovanni's earnest reply.

The days and the weeks passed by, and under all the love and care bestowed upon him Dewey waxed fat and sleek. Though he did not become quite the "beaut" his doting master considered him, still he was a quite presentable dog, and his devotion to Giovanni was fine to see.

He was a serious fellow, rendered so, no doubt, by the buffetings of a hard world. He did not frisk about much, but generally sat back on his haunches with a grave and thoughtful air, deaf to the advances and blandishments of all his master's customers but one—and this was Mr. Thurston.

Very early in their acquaintance the lawyer had found out Dewey's great weakness, a fondness for sugar, and so he slipped a lump into his pocket every morning at the breakfast table. Every morning Dewey, though he looked serious and preoccupied, was on the alert when Mr. Thurston approached Giovanni for his paper, and he watched Mr. Thurston's hands with fascinated eyes.

When the paper was bought, neatly folded, and thrust into one of Mr. Thurston's coat pockets, Dewey would prick up his ears and give a yelp which he tried in vain to suppress. He knew so well what was coming next! But how tantalizingly slow the man was! Mr. Thurston would look at the dog in a casual way, as if he had never seen him before. He would adjust his glasses and look again, while Dewey grew more and more uneasy and impatient. Then, when his hand stole carelessly to one of his pockets, Dewey would jump to his feet, all his solemn airs gone, ready for a snapping catch at the little lump of delicious sweetness Mr. Thurston would toss lightly into the air.

"Ah, Dewey!" Mr. Thurston would sometimes say, with a whimsical look of sadness, "I'm afraid your affection for me is bought. But I must have your friendship at any price, so here's another lump for you today."

"Oh, but he likes yer, Mr. Thurston," Giovani would protest, with much earnestness. "Honest, he does. Don't yer, Dewey? Speak out now, yer little runt, an' don't sit dere yawpin' like dat!"

But Dewey refused to "speak out." He only gave his tail a few languid flips, and his admirers had to be content with this mild affirmation.

Giovanni's ownership of Dewey did not, you may be sure, go uncontested by the urchins who had once attempted to bait the dog. Johnny the Dago had to wage more than one single-handed battle for his own. Single-handed, did I say? I beg Dewey's pardon! That little dog was "no slouch," as Giovanni had declared. He helped with his teeth, and so successfully that the boys were glad, after a time, to keep a safe distance from him.

But they could throw stones, and one morning Mr. Thurston found both boy and dog looking sad and miserable. Dewey's leg was broken, and Giovanni did not know what to do about it.

"It was dat Mickey Dolan," he explained, shaking an ineffective fist down the street, where Mickey might or might not be lurking. "He jest hates Dewey, dough de pore li'l dorg ain't done him nuthin'. He snuk up an' heaved a rock w'en we wasn't lookin'. A big feller like dat heavin' rocks at a li'l feller like Dewey—tain't right."

There were unaccustomed tears in Giovanni's eyes as he gazed at his beloved Dewey, wounded and almost helpless on the curb.

Poor little Dewey! Even the lump of sugar Mr. Thurston held out to him could not tempt him to try to rise to his feet.

"Bring the poor fellow over to my office, Giovanni," said Mr. Thurston. "There's a surgeon next door who'll set his broken leg."

So Dewey's broken leg was set, and Giovanni never knew what a big sum his friend Mr. Thurston paid out for the operation. For the surgeon happened to be a very famous one indeed, and his fees were not light. Besides, he did not like either dogs or street urchins. But Giovanni did not know all this, and when the surgeon contemptuously refused his proffered handful of nickels and pennies—all the money he had in the world—he was very grateful.

The dog always limped a little after that. Perhaps the surgeon, not liking dogs, had not been so careful as he should have been. At any rate, Admiral Dewey always showed that he had been in honorable battle, after this, and neither his master nor Mr. Thurston loved him the less for that.

One morning in October, Mr. Thurston missed his two friends from their accustomed corner. No cry of "Pipers! pipers" greeted him, no dog yelped for sugar.

A clerk in a nearby drug store came to the door. He knew Mr. Thurston by sight, and he guessed what he was looking for.

"Aren't you looking for the newsboy—the young Dago?" he began amiably. "Well, he isn't here today. Got run over by a truck yesterday, and they took him to St. Luke's Hospital. They brought him into our store, and I guess there ain't any bones broken. The doctors seemed to agree on that, though he's badly bruised and shaken up."

Mr. Thurston stared at him.

"You're sure he wasn't seriously injured?" he said, anxiously.

"Oh, sure."

"And the dog—what did they do with him? They were inseparable companions. Perhaps they let him go with his master to the hospital."

"Oh, the dog," answered the clerk, with indifference, and smiling a little at Mr. Thurston's anxiety about a mere cur, "the dog was killed, I hear."

"Killed!" Mr. Thurston repeated. "How so? Was he run over, too?"

"I guess he was. Some of the folks who saw the whole thing say he ran out to the boy when he saw him under the wheels, and made a grab at him with his teeth, as if to pull him out, and then he got caught too. The story doesn't sound very likely, but it may be true. Some dogs are mighty intelligent."

"Some dogs are mighty brave and true!" Mr. Thurston exclaimed, with a sudden burst of pity and strong feeling. "Intelligent!" he went on, almost indignantly. "Do you call a deed like that merely intelligent? I tell you, it was great—it was fine!"

"Oh, well." The clerk shrugged his shoulders. "Perhaps so."

Mr. Thurston turned on his heel. He had an impulse to beat the callous clerk with his stick, and he deemed it prudent to pass on. "Oh, the hard-hearted callousness of all of us at times!" he thought, with some bitterness. "So unable, so unwilling, to see the fine attributes that lie hidden in what we, in our arrogance, call the brute creation!"

In the afternoon, as soon as he was able to leave the office, he hastened to St. Luke's Hospital, to comfort the poor boy lying there, grieving, he was sure, more for his lost dog than for his own hurt.

"Anyway, Mr. Thurston," said poor Giovanni, when he had told his friend all about it, "he died game—he wasn't no slouch, was he?"

"I should say not, Giovanni!" Mr. Thurston exclaimed, patting the boy's restless hand as it lay, bruised and bandaged, on the coverlet. "He did a braver and nobler thing than many men would have dared to do. He died a hero, Giovanni!"

"A hero!" Giovanni's eyes, still wet with the tears he had shed for his dog, burned with a sudden fire. "Dat's w'at he was, Mr. Thurston, an' I'm goin' to try not to feel too bad about him. My Dewey was a hero!"

Mr. Thurston's eyes, too, were wet, as he murmured, half to himself, " 'Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.' "

GREECE LIVES AGAIN.

FRAGRANT MEMORIES OF HISTORIC DAYS ARE STIRRED BY THE PROWS OF PROGRESS.

[New York Mail:] The cosmopolitan fleet, sent out to impress the unimpressionable Turk that it would be better for him to let the powers levy and expend the taxes of Macedonia, assembled at Piraeus, halted at Mytilene and again at Lemnos, and thence threatened Constantinople. This recital of proper names suggests one thing that may be put to the credit of the Turk. It is impossible to stir him up without teaching the Western world a lesson in classical history and mythologyy. Mytilene is the ancient Lesbos, Piraeus is the seaport of Athens, Constantinoule is the ancient Byzantium. When it is noted that there is serious trouble in Crete, the "Eastern Question" will be seen to have laid hand on a harp pulsing with singularly haunting harmonies.

Macedonia was the home of Alexander, and the seat of the great but short-lived empire that was the forerunner of Rome. Piraeus is vibrant with the memories of maritim Athens—Piraeus, which was fortified by Themistocles, and joined by the famous Long Walls with the Attic capital; Piraeus, whence arose a wail so loud, when a stranger brought the news of the crowning Syracuse disaster, that it was heard on the Acropolis four miles away. Lesbos was the birthplace of Sappho and Alcaeus, who addressed to each other certain burning and never-to-be-forgotten lines. Lemnos was conquered for Athens by Miltiades, and finally ceded to her by the Persians in the Peace of Antalkidas. Constantinople was the capital of the eastern Roman empire for a longer period than the Normans and their descendants have ruled in England. Cretan history antedates classic Greece, and the very name raises phantoms of Minos and that fantastic and terrible tale of Daedalus and his labyrinth.

Europe cannot speak a word to the Turk but it awakes some haunting old-world echo. On their disciplinary mission its ships follow the old tracks where the triremes of Athens sought the ships of Tyre when they served the great king, where in turn they were sought by the Spartan Lysander and irrevocably crushed in the battle of Aegos Potami. It is the distinction of the Ottoman that he still holds in active or formal allegiance nearly all the old capitals and "holy places" of the world—the seats of Rawlinson's "Five Great Monarchies" of the empires of the Pharaohs, Alexander and Constantine, and of the Saracenic dynasty, illustrated by "the golden prime of good Haroun Al Raschir." Perhaps his greatest condemnation is that the Turk is scarcely aware of the fact.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

ROUP AND LICE

THE BANE OF THE BUSINESS AND THE WAYS OF FIGTING THEM.

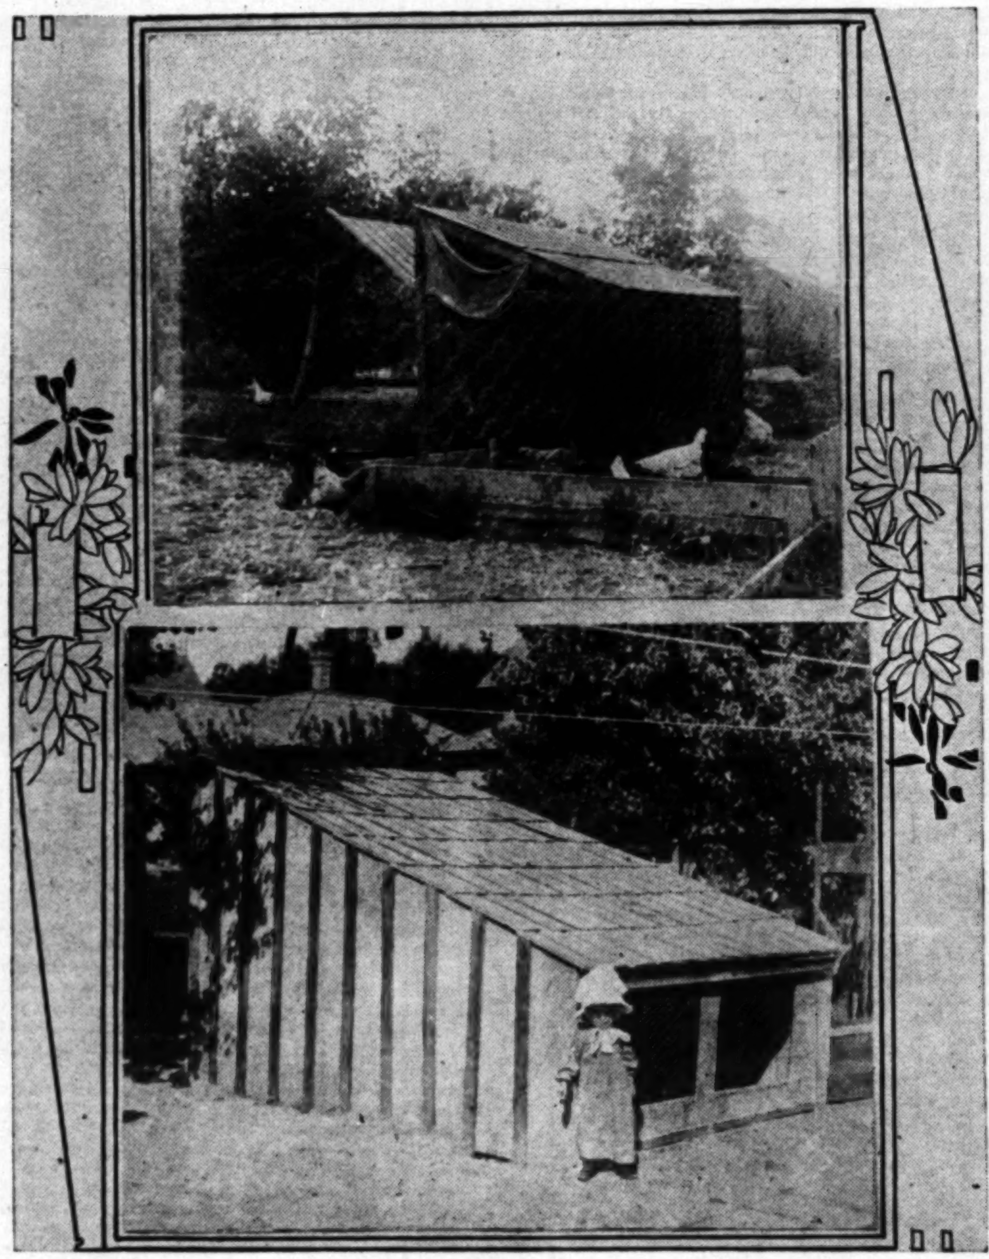
By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experience with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

WILLIAM C. BUCHANAN of this city writes as follows of two of the great obstacles to success with poultry:

"I have had some experience and have studied the question carefully. The almost universal results are failure, from two causes—lice and roup. Can the United States government be induced to establish a station in this climate and learn and teach the people how to combat these two enemies of the poultry raiser and the business? It would be a gain equal to any other interest in this favored land.

"I am writing this in the interest of the many who would gladly raise poultry if they could do it successfully. This is not for publication, but to call your attention to a very important product that in other States, Missouri and Kansas particularly, where the absolute results show that poultry raising is equal to the raising of cattle and horses. It all is simply this: Can our ranchmen combat and master the roup and lice?"



TWO STYLES OF HEN HOUSES.

Roup is indeed a difficult disease to combat, and at all times more or less present. Robinson in his work on "Poultry Craft" says that the term is used to apply to a variety of diseases affecting the head and throat. The present tendency is to limit the use of the word roup to diphtheria, or diphtheritic roup, and to call ordinary roup not seriously affecting the throat, influenza. Influenza can be treated as a cold. For diphtheria a number of different treatments have been successful at one time and failed at another. Whether or not a cure can be effected probably depends as much on the constitution and antecedents of the fowl as a treatment. Most of the roup remedies advertised have been successfully used in many cases. Experienced practical poultrymen do not doctor fowls which have diphtheria. They kill and bury or burn them.

Dr. E. D. Salmon, of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, says that it is a contagious disease due to bacilli. Its development is favored by filthy, damp, badly ventilated and drafty houses. Symptoms are catarrh, obstructed breathing, grayish or yellowish patches of false membrane in mouth or eyes and prostration. As treatment, keep in dry, well ventilated place, free from drafts of air. Apply a 2 per cent. solution of carbolic acid to affected parts, give tonics, and disinfect poultry houses with carbolic acid solution (5 per cent.) and lime wash; isolate sick birds.

We believe that this matter is now under consideration by the State University (Agricultural Experiment Station) at Berkeley, and that in due course of events we may have some new light thrown upon the question calculated to at least lessen the evil. Being contagious, preventive measures are more likely to lead to success in combating it than any curative measures that might be adopted.

In a climate mild and equable like ours, where man enjoys the fullness of life more keenly than in a colder region, it stands to reason that insect, bird and animal life also luxuriates. There is no question as to the evil of lice and mites in the poultry yards. To literally eradicate these injurious insects is out of the question; to literally free our birds and their environment of them is equally futile; but we can hold them down below the danger line, and this every breeder must do in order to attain success. In this regard there are ways and means at hand which under intelligent operation will keep flocks, houses and yards reasonably free. Among these are fumigation, insect powders, liquid lice killers (usually applied on the roosts and with a spray pump in the houses and yards,) lime and sulphur, whitewashing, etc. Indeed, it is as essential to fight lice and mites as it is to feed and water. Watch your flocks carefully, and see to it for a certainty that these obnoxious insects gain no foothold on the ises.

Two More Plans for Hen Houses.

We herewith submit exterior views of two poultry houses which are of easy construction, cost and admirable for the service they are to perform.

The upper view shows a style of house much in and about Santa Ana, which is constructed of redwood shakes, five feet long, four feet six width; roosts are eighteen inches from the ground, will accommodate from six to ten hens or from to twenty-five head of young stock, the number ing upon the breed. As a general proposition this is decidedly in favor for young stock where bred in numbers. Being light it is easily moved cleaned.

The lower view is of a house so constructed as readily taken apart, being built in panels, put with large wire nails which are so driven into the as to be easily drawn out, only about 70 per their length being driven into the wood. The the house is hung on hinges, which when swung properly propped, allows the sun and air free the interior during at least a portion of the day.
greatly facilitates good sanitation. The roosts the full length. The structure is about 8 feet feet, 4½ inches wide, built of 1x3 scantlings and redwood shakes.

Our view shows in the foreground the system ployed for securing scratching pens, which during weather constitute ideal conditions in which the can hen can choose her own hours of labor, of any union or walking delegate or lily-fingered agitator, who may object to working for longer than 12:45 to 1 every other Wednesday, and nine-hour pay for the service.

The Beautiful Hamburgs.

By many fanciers and breeders both East and the Hamburgs, when bred true to type, and plumage, are considered among the most domestic fowls. In bearing and characteristics largely resemble the Polish, the only exception furnishings of the head—possessing neither beard, but rose combs. Most authorities rate rather delicate, particularly so when bred thermometer plays below the zero point during the ter months. In the Southwest, however, and in Southern California, this objection is largely come by the mild and equable climate, and when housed and cared for, they do as well as any of the varieties in the Mediterranean class.

In habit and characteristics they are almost with the Leghorns, being good foragers, habit, non-sitters, and layers of a medium-sized egg. In the production of hen fruit they are among the best and, though good for table

They are too small to figure much in that regard, owing to the smallness of the bones, however, they produce more meat than might be expected, which is of good flavor. Their grace and symmetrical appearance coupled with the regular markings in figure and color of plumage render them attractive for people who breed poultry solely for pleasure along fancy lines. Their bright, rose-like combs, sprightly habits, elegant contour and shape of body, pure white ear lobes are all striking characteristics which enhance beautiful and graceful birds.

They belong to the Dutch class, which is limited to the six varieties of the Hamburgs, namely Golden and Silver Spangled, Golden and Silver Pencilled, Black and White, the only difference between the three groups being merely a matter of color markings in the plumage. The last edition of the Standard of Perfection specifies disqualifications in addition to those applied generally to all classes, covering all six varieties. These are much alike in character, hence we give only those applying to the most popular variety, namely the Silver Spangled. Red ear lobes covering more than one-third of surface; absence of distinct bars across the wings; markings wholly crescentic; shanks other than leaden blue, except the natural fading from age; hen feathered male; the weight clause does not appear at all.

Laying Eggs by Electricity.

According to an Associated Press dispatch, a Mr. Harry Howe of Pittsburgh, Pa., has made the somewhat astounding discovery explaining why the average barnyard fowl fails to produce hen fruit at the rate of two or three an hour, viz., that she is wanting in sufficient voltage of electricity traveling through her corporosity to enable her reproductive organs to do business at the old stand in a much more rapid and prolific manner. If we are to believe the dispatches, Mr. Howe conceived the idea of inventing a hen-laying machine last summer while spending his vacation on a farm near Petoskey, Mich. While there, he overheard the farmer's wife with whom he was stopping, complain about her hens not laying when she thought they should. He began a mental review of his electrical knowledge, with the hope that he might arrive at conclusions that would be profitable. He conceived the idea that the chief reason for the hen's inability to lay more often was due to the fact that she was not supplied with sufficient electrical nourishment to induce a vigor of the tissues and functions that cause her to deposit eggs. He began working on a battery and apparatus which, attached to the hen roost at night and turned on to the proper degree, would circulate an electrical current through the hen's body which would build up and strengthen her egg-bearing functions to such an extent that they would by matter of course lay an egg regularly each day. He experimented largely, and found that his device produced the anticipated results.

What a wonderful discovery, a soul-stirring event, a harbinger of comfort and joy, a source of affluence and wealth unknown, yea, verily, a chicken millennium! No more if's and but's, no more problems to solve, no more riddle to master, no more agitation for higher prices, the vocation of the walking delegate of the hen pen has gone up Salt River. Alas, and alas, they are corralled, bound hand and foot like Prometheus to the rocks with the vulture of electricity picking the eggs out of their organs at the rate of two or three a day. The unprincipled employer of the American hen has her on the run, all he has to do is to go out and buy a slender strand of electric wire, a small battery, place it along the primrose path of dalliance along which she usually scratches and cackles, and Presto Change! she drops the glorious fruit at regular intervals as she proceeds upon her way rejoicing, whether she wills it or no. Was ever hen in this manner wooed! was ever hen in this manner won?

In the Standard-Bred Bird.

A recent issue of "Poultry" so strongly gives emphasis to the opinions expressed in this department, anent the wisdom of breeding only pure-blooded fowl in contradistinction to the mongrel and scrub, that we give it here in full:

"By all means, raise thoroughbred poultry. The farmer, the city man, in fact, no one, can afford to waste good food, shelter and care on dunghills and scrubs that are such a mixture of color and size that you could not tell whether their size was an ostrich or a guinea. There are some who think that by crossing Plymouth Rocks or Wyandottes with a Leghorn that they will get a larger fowl than the Leghorn and a better layer than the Rock or Wyandotte, but such is not the case. And if you do, where would you get your male birds for the next year's breeding pen? You would have to use a Leghorn, Wyandotte, or Plymouth Rock, which would make the next year's stock three-fourths instead of half-bloods. And if some one should ask you what kind of fowls you had, what name would you give them?

"Some may ask, why not breed the cockerels back to the hens? This would be very close to inbreeding, and in this case, where the young hens are a mixture of two distinct breeds, the young stock would not be as prolific egg producers as the original stock, nor as good table fowls. It takes no more feed or care for the best thoroughbred poultry than for the mongrel. Profit and pleasure will come from the former, while loss and disgust with the 'hen business' comes from the latter."

The Specialty Clubs.

Immediately following the late Los Angeles poultry show the pigeon breeders and fanciers took steps to organize the Southwestern Pigeon Club, which has now been perfected with the following officers: W. H. Elliott, president; C. M. Bates and F. G. McCoy, vice-presidents; Wilbert E. Foster, secretary; Martin Smith, treasurer, with Messrs. Elliott, Foster, John Brenton, George and F. G. At the same time and place there was organized the Orpington Club of Southern California, with the following charter members: Ralph B. Randall, W. L. Hardison, George Dodd, C. H. Goodacre, S. H. Garner, W. A. Stewart and Percy L. Harley. There are a large number of Orpington breeders in this section, and the new organization will no doubt do much to advance the breed and increase its prestige at coming shows throughout the Southwest.

Alfalfa Meal for Poultry.

Since alfalfa meal is essentially a California product of which large quantities are manufactured in the San Joaquin Valley, it is interesting to learn of its progress east of the Rocky Mountains as a substitute for green food in the winter months, also its feeding value. From a late bulletin issued by the Iowa Agricultural College we learn that hens fed on alfalfa meal lay very fertile eggs, which produce strong, vigorous and healthy chickens; that they will molt quicker in the fall and commence to lay earlier in the season. For laying hens several quarts of alfalfa meal are put into a closed vessel, then boiling water poured over the meal until it is thoroughly moistened; then place a cover over the vessel and let the mixture steep for a while. Just before the feeding dash a little cold water over the feed, which brings out the green color, and the whole presents a very pleasing appearance and is as near grass as any feed can be. Some prefer to mix the meal with table scraps or grain, both of which add palatability and variety to the mash. Bone meal and meat scraps make excellent additions to alfalfa.

Scratchings from the Yard.

Fowls not kept on sandy soil must be supplied with grit.

If the male is not pure-bred he will effect no improvement in the flock.

Where a man keeps 100 hens, the house should be cleaned out every day.

Cabbage, lettuce, carrots and vegetables generally can be given with advantage to poultry.

The dust box is necessary for the fowls during the winter time if they are to be kept free from lice. Nothing is superior to road dust for this purpose.

At the Cincinnati meeting of the American Poultry Association, Grant M. Curtis of Buffalo, N. Y., was chosen president, and T. E. Odd of Beaver, Pa., secretary-treasurer.

The Petaluma Poultry Journal says: "It may pay, but it doesn't pay best, to keep a lot of scrub hens. The higher the grade the better the returns, other things being equal."

There was paid in Boston on January 20, what is supposed to be the highest price ever realized for a single bird in this country, viz., $750 for a Plymouth Rock hen, which was secured to go to the Crystal Palace show in London.

In your efforts to improve your own stock, do not hesitate to buy from those who have improved theirs. It is in this way that the best points and best blood can be introduced into your flock. Do not hesitate to pay a fair price for good blood.

Millett seed has always been regarded as a desirable feed for hens, and has been credited with causing an increase of eggs. It is indeed a very good feed, and can be commended when scattered in the litter because small in size, which causes the fowls to work incessantly for it.

It has been a question among people growing white and brown-shelled eggs, which was the better of the two. A recent chemical experiment made along these lines by the University of California showed that there was practically no difference as to their nutrient values. In the Boston market the brown-shelled eggs bring a little higher price than the white, while in San Francisco the conditions are just the reverse. This goes to show that custom influences market values. The thing to be avoided in marketing eggs is a lack of uniformity in color and size. Where more than one breed constitutes a flock on a farm it is advisable to segregate the product of hen fruit according to size and secondly according to color. In this way they are quite apt to bring a little more when marketed.

A test is going on at Sydney, Australia with six hens or pullets to a pen. There are 246 hens or pullets in the contest, and the total production of eggs for three months was 3476, an average of 14.13 for each one. The three months' record included a pen of Silver Wyandottes, 11 months old, that had laid 206 eggs. Another pen of the same breed had to its credit 200 eggs; a pen of Rose Comb White Leghorns produced 191 eggs, and a pen of Anconas entered by W. H. Tombs of Penrith had produced 176. Of the forty-one pens entered, but seventeen had produced 100 or more eggs during the three months, the lowest of these being credited with 111 eggs.

Asked and Answered.

Mr. J. G. Finley of Pasadena, writes The Times as follows:

"Can eggs be shipped by electric cars fifty miles without injuring them for hatching, and if so, which end should be at top?"

We see no reason why eggs could not be shipped by electric express as well as by steam cars, if same care is taken in packing for shipment. Eggs should be stood on the small end for shipment, and, after receiving, should be allowed to stand 24 hours before placing.

Mr. L. W. Westfall, Gardena, who has just come over here from England, writes The Times for information along the following points:

What is the proper way to dress broilers and fryers for this market, and how should they be killed? What is the best way to market your produce to avoid paying high commission? What organization has this State similar to the Poultry Organization of England?

The subject of broilers and fryers is an important one in that it is an item of great interest to the poultry market here. There is always a ready market for broilers and fryers at the larger hotels, restaurants and commission-houses, and most of them pay good prices the year round. Broilers should weigh 1¾ pounds each and fryers from 22 to 27 pounds per dozen. The best way to dress them for this market is to kill by bleeding, then scald and pluck.

There are two organizations, composed of breeders and fanciers, with headquarters in Los Angeles. Of these the Los Angeles County Poultry Association is the oldest organization of its kind on the Pacific Coast, is a regularly incorporated body, which has held shows in this town for the past twenty-five years.

The Poultry Breeders' Society is of recent formation, has a large membership and is quite popular. It held its first show in conjunction with the older organization the past season.

William M. Humphreys, 241 N. Union avenue, is secretary of the latter, and the editor of this department is secretary of the former. Either will be glad to furnish any information that may be desired.

Mrs. E. P. Gray of this city wants to know what is the matter with one of her birds. She states that a turkey scratched its eye several weeks ago, as it did the eyes of two other fowls. The other two soon recovered, but this one did not, and in fact, seemed to grow worse. It had symptoms similar to the swell-head, having a swelling between the eye and the nose, and a bad cold.

This bird undoubtedly has the roup, which developed from the cold settling in the wound. This is a difficult disease to combat, and since it is contagious, most breeders prefer killing their birds immediately and burying them in order to keep the disease from spreading. The best remedy is the one given by Dr. Salmon, referred to in another part of this page.

AN INTIMATE VIEW OF MOROCCO.

There are many evils in Morocco, but it is not, as many suppose, a lawless country. In case a Christian is robbed or killed, the Moorish authorities know that this will be used as evidence to show how loosely the country is governed; they know also that they will be compelled to pay indemnity. Their law to safeguard the travel of Christians is a good one. It is that the Sultan holds his chiefs responsible, and will compel them to pay that indemnity. The chief in whose district a crime against a foreigner has occurred displeases the Sultan, and his tribe pays dearly for it.

A few years ago, a Tangier Jew—under American protection—was killed in the streets of Fez. The American government demanded and received an indemnity. This money, plus commission, was collected from the shopkeepers in the vicinity of the crime, who had ample time to save the man, but made no effort to do so.

There are elements of good breeding in every Moor, and the average native has a better knowledge of America than the average American of Morocco. He will at least tell you that America is a large country, has railways, and plenty of money.

AN IDEAL BOARD.

The corporation president absent-mindedly credited himself with $20,000 for a quarter's singing lessons.

"Oh," he cried, "this new board of directors of ours is absolutely ideal."

"How so?" asked the secretary, as he stuffed $125,000 in greenbacks in his pockets, and bade the cashier charge the sum to legislation.

"Half the board," the president replied, "is capable of nothing, and the other half is capable of anything."

FIELD NOTES.

Spraying Home Trees.

EVERY fifth householder in the suburban and rural districts, perhaps, has in possession some kind of a machine for spraying his garden and house plants and the family orchard. But the others are content to allow fungi and insect pests to blacken and consume their plants when the investment of a few dollars in a spray pump or garden syringe would equip them with the means of maintaining clean stock. Leaving out citrus fruits, for which we have a far better remedy, spraying has become an established orchard practice all over the East where up-to-date methods prevail, and is recognized as a part of culture with plowing, pruning and fertilizing. I see hundreds of small orchards for household use just planting. But what is the use of further burdening the soil in this way unless the planters expect to keep these trees clean?

New Fruit Menace.

MESSRS. P. J. Dreher, B. A. Woodford and others who have investigated the subject, find that the fruit dealers of Oakland and San Francisco are gathering their second-hand orange and lemon boxes and shipping them at a very low rate to various points in Southern California, where the boxes are used in shipping to Oakland and San Francisco unpacked oranges and lemons. These boxes had been used originally in carrying fruit infected with red and purple scale, and it is feared their return will scatter these infections. Consequently the horticultural officials are asked to quarantine these empty boxes whenever they appear, or to take steps to keep them out altogether. The danger from this source will no doubt be recognized by the officials, and all efforts made to cut off this trouble. There is no question but that the scattering of dangerous insects is caused largely by such artificial means as these, and the matter should be recognized between districts and orchards at home as well.

S. M. Tracy Here.

THE TIMES news columns contained an account of the arrival of S. M. Tracy, a special agent of the Department of Agriculture, who will resume his investigations of green manuring crops and subjects therewith connected. I have had a call from this gentleman since the interview above noticed, and am pleased to convey to the farmers the statement that the government is giving California extensive recognition upon matters of vital moment, such as a study of the orange in transportation, of the pear blight, the walnut blight and now the study of green manuring crops. In all these the agricultural Department at Washington has taken renewed interest this winter and the promise is fair for yet more extensive work on these lines. Mr. Tracy's subject is though by many to be of supreme importance, as the improvement of the physical condition of our soils seems to be the point on which success will turn as the country exhausts the virgin qualities of the land.

Valencia Growing Overdone.

A CORRESPONDENT asks for figures showing the number of carloads of Valencia oranges produced in this State, hoping from the report to gather an idea of the future of this fruit. I have no figures at hand on this point, nor do I know how one is to approximate them. Perhaps there is no means of finding out. As to the other question in the letter, I see nothing but safety in the growing of the Valencia Late, but one's opinion on this is of little value. We know, however, that the consumption of fruit per capita in this country is increasing and that the production of fruits in general is not at as great a percentage of gain as is the population. There have never been published statistics showing the pomological resources of this country, but we can judge from the output of apples, for example, that the ratio of increase is not alarming to the orange grower. One factor in the case is the late-year profits in cereal farming. Many of the Eastern States noted a heavy increase in orchard planting during the years of our agricultural depression some ten or twelve years ago. These orchards are just getting into full bearing. Yet with all this, the apple crop of the past season was very small. Who expects the farmers to abandon grain for fruit for some years to come under the profitable seasons promised for grain farming? Great developments in pomology are not to be expected under these conditions, and California fruits will prosper both directly and indirectly as the result of general agricultural advancement. As to the Valencia orange, its great capacity of distribution will give it the field, and it is doubtful if its production can be easily overdone.

Pruning Orange Trees.

GENERAL complaint has been made about the unusual prevalence of dead brush in the orange trees during the last year or so. The manifestations of this trouble are so varied that it is very difficult to adjust an opinion as to the cause. In fact, there may be many reasons for this appearance, as in hundreds of cases it is found in the very best trees, and also in orchards that are not in the best condition. Our orchardists need not expect trees twenty years old to bear thrifty wood in the center. Older age will make other changes in the physical appearance of the trees, and yet not necessarily make them less vigorous or fruitful. I know some of the groves where dead brush is found most prevalent are suffering for plant food, whether the soil has become exhausted or has merely reached the degree of physical imperfection in which the trees cannot do well. In such cases fertilization and the improvement of the tilth of the soil are the remedies.

Then there are many fine groves whose trees have grown wood so abundantly that the inner branches have died for want of light and air. These cases are not serious, yet they are not ideal, for sometimes the weakened inner branches may be attacked with disease where they would escape if properly ventilated. Ordinarily the orange tree requires little or no pruning to secure an ideal shape. But the removing of a part of the tree for the betterment of the remainder is another question. Every part of a plant is struggling against every other part for dominance or existence. The elaboration of its food is largely through its extremities, and these must have their requirements, or fail. In this the functions of the animal are entirely different, supplying nourishment and purification directly from a vital center. For merely physical development the orange tree seems able to take care of itself. For fruit development no doubt inner pruning is necessary in these cases, equalizing the strength of the branches, the development relatively together of the wood and fruit.

Department Reports.

THE committee appointed by the President to report on the elimination of red tape and economy in the publication of public documents has seen fit to criticise the Department of Agriculture severely upon some points of its administration. In reference to crop reports the strictures are particularly harsh, and I do not doubt the facts are as set forth by the committee. But it may not have occurred to this body of men that accuracy in agricultural statistics or even proximity to the facts is practically impossible. In no other branch of industry are reliable statistics so hard to acquire. Some doubt as to the advisability of obtaining crop reports may well be held, yet so long as it is attempted under the authority of Congress the difficulties should be recognized.

Upon the publication of documents I wish to say that the pamphlets, circulars, year books and special reports of the Department of Agriculture are eagerly sought by the farmers, for these publications are uniformly good. Where has a Congressman's speech, or a report from any other department been in such demand as a book entitled "Diseases of the Horse." So great was the cry for this excellent work that Congress was forced to publish an immense edition through a special appropriation made for that purpose. Our office here distributed 200 copies of this work, every one of which was supplied by the special request of a farmer. The committee in question is no doubt correct in its denunciation of the wastefulness in public printing, but it should discriminate between the useful and the worthless, and in no case should the agricultural publications be curtailed. The committee said nothing in its report concerning the enormous expense of printing the speeches of Senators and Representatives, yet there is three-fifths of this stuff that has no value to the nation, and much of that proportion which has not even local justification for appearing in print. The fact is, the farmers are using every document sent out by this department, and I can testify to their merit, for The Times receives all of them.

The Exeter-Lindsay Cantaloupe Association has ordered 600 pounds of cantaloupe seed. . . . Now is a good time for cutting out the dead wood of orange trees, and for lopping off the tips of the branches that look like they had been frosted. . . . Chicago has cornered canned tomatoes, but California usually has plenty of the fresh article on tap, even if the figures for it are a little high. . . . Rocky Ford, Colorado, comes to the front again with a promise of 3000 acres of cantaloupes this season. . . . G. Harold Powell has resumed the investigation of the orange in transportation, with headquarters at Riverside. . . . Farmers should know that one very strong dose of cyanide will obliterate red or purple scale. . . . There is a heavy call for apple and peach trees this winter, indicating that these fruits will soon assume their former position as important orchard products. . . . Pineapples received at Los Angeles from the Sandwich Islands are so badly infected with mealy bugs that the importation of the fruit in this condition is to be contested. . . Rape as a cover crop is to be thoroughly tested in the celery districts of Orange county, to be plowed under in early summer for humus. . . . Strawberry culture will be of great importance at Burbank this season. . . As to the profits from field peppers, I refer an inquirer from the San Fernando to the growers of this commodity at Santa Ana. . . . The State Horticultural Commission has received parasites from China supposed there to have controlled the purple scale, but it is said the material did not arrive in very good condition. . . . Evidence is plentiful that the Scutellista will get an early stand this season in the attacks upon the black scale.

Alfalfa as a Forage Crop.

The following contribution on alfalfa as forage is from the pen of G. W. Shaw:

No crop is more valuable as a fertilizer to enrich the soil in nitrogen than alfalfa, and while it is equally valuable as a forage crop, there are many of its tions not fully appreciated even in those localities it is most grown. Wherever it can be made to produce a good yield it furnishes more of the valuable ents for milk and meat production than any other age crop that can be grown. Its value as a milk producer is recognized by all dairymen and feeders. It valuable for milk and meat production mainly of the large amount of digestible protein it contains.
erage forage crops, like timothy hay, blue grass and natural varieties of prairie hay, contain from 6 to cent. of protein, of which about 60 per cent. is diges or available for the production of meat and milk.
falfa contains from 12 to 14 per cent. of protein, twice as much as average forage crops, and its is more completely digested and utilized by animals

Whenever it is fed, a saving is made in the grain of the ration. If fifteen pounds of alfalfa are fed day as the main part of the coarse fodder, about pounds of digestible protein are supplied. If six to pounds of corn fodder are fed along with the alfalfa the two together contain about 1.25 pounds of diges protein. With these coarse fodders it is necessary add only four or five pounds of average farm grain mill products to secure the requisite amount of pro part of the forage ration is a poor quality of timothy prairie hay it takes over twice as much to supply same amount of nutrients as are contained in hay. This would make an excessively bulky ration would be undesirable in other ways. Thus it is that alfalfa forms the main part of the ration it

Alfalfa is frequently injured in feeding value by coming overripe, by excessive bleaching, and to leaching rains. Experiments at the experiment tions have shown that the largest yield per acre of tein is secured when alfalfa is in full bloom. If to fully mature, the percentage of fiber is the expense of the protein. In overripe alfalfa

Small-farmers and Gardeners.

A GENTLEMAN in the East writes for a situation as foreman of a fruit ranch, or in a market garden, where his experience would justify fairly remunerative but constant employment. This department does not stand in the attitude of an employment agency, and I merely sent this man's name to one of our people engaged in wholesale fruit growing. However, any definite inquiries as to conditions here and the outlook for work will be turned out with the Friday night's grist of personal answers. I know of only one firm that advertises a list of head men for this work. Peter Henderson & Co. of New York state that there is a surplus of help in these lines in New Jersey, and that they will supply names to those seeking assistance of this kind. Los Angeles today has 250,000 people to be fed with wholesome fruits and vegetables, yet, while the quality of these products is as good as elsewhere there is no city of its size in the world that has so great a proportion of people who want the best table products. But to accomplish better things in green corn the gardeners must get the best varieties to be had. Tomato Growing at Toluca.

A NEW industry is to be tried the coming season at the farther end of the Cahuenga Pass. It is that of raising tomatoes for the canneries. So far about seventy acres has been placed under contract by a Pasadena cannery, and the acreage may be increased. The growers are guaranteed so much per ton, with the privileges of the retail markets for as much of the fruit as the farmers may wish to dispose of in that way. One of the prospective growers said the planters had been advised of a blight-resistant variety, the seed to be furnished by the cannery company. If there is such a variety in existence tomato growers should investigate, and if it will withstand this destructive wilt, secure the seed on trial. I had not heard that there was a variety that is immune from this fatal malady. Unless the wilt disease becomes less severe than it has been for the last year or two, the business is doomed to very small proportions. As neither potatoes nor tomatoes have been grown largely in this new district it may not be destructive for a season or two.

Do Seed Potatoes Degenerate?

THE opinion is almost universal that seed potatoes degenerate so as to render it quite impossible to maintain stamina in any variety. The belief is common that because of this, old varieties will fail to the extent of being entirely discarded, and that in time of necessity they must be superseded by new varieties. Both opinions rest on observation and history, and both would seem at first thought to be supported by strong testimony.

Nevertheless experiments have been conducted which tend to show that stamina in potatoes may be maintained indefinitely where both soil and climatic conditions are favorable to their growth. But, should only one of these be congenial, it is doubtful if stamina can be maintained under such conditions. The question is undoubtedly one of great interest to potato growers, as, if varieties inherently and of necessity degenerate, all efforts on the part of growers to have it otherwise will not avail.

That varieties have degenerated in the past is the testimony of history. The varieties that were common in the years 1845 to 1848 in the United States, when disease played havoc with the crops, are not now in existence. The Neshannock was one of the most famous of them. It was very widely grown and was of excellent table quality. Other varieties introduced since have fared no better; one of these, the Irish Cup, at one time much grown and much valued for its edible qualities, cannot now be obtained even from seedsmen.

Even such varieties as Beauty or Hebron and Rural New Yorker are losing some of the favor with which they were received when they were first introduced. Other varieties unheard of a few years ago are now coming into favor. They are, of course, somewhat sectional in their popularity, but even so, they are displacing old varieties of the same.

The commonness of degeneracy has led many to suppose that degeneracy inheres in the potato. If that were true, no variety could be grown long without seriously deteriorating under the best of conditions. That deterioration is quick in varieties in the South and slow in varieties in the North, shows that deterioration is at least a thing of degree.

The conclusion from the above premises is legitimate that deterioration is influenced by external influences. Now the inference would seem fair in the absence of contrary proof, that if external influences can be made to greatly retard deterioration when these are entirely natural, it would be possible to so aid them by selection and culture, that all the good qualities in any variety would remain unimpaired. Presumptive evidences at least favor this view.—[Orange Judd Farmer.

The Garden Bountiful.

DEPEND upon it you may get enough adulterations in your table beverages and condiments to fulfill your share in the consumption of the adulterants offered in American food. As to canned goods, our imported meats in tins will certainly cover your duties in putting away poisonous products used to preserve and color these products. Our home canneries have not been accused of manifold adulterations, yet they ship a large proportion of their output to other markets. Then why not have some home-quality tomatoes, pumpkins, apples and all other canning fruits, and use less preserved meats and adulterated vegetables in tins? To secure these, have a good home garden and a small fruit orchard. Mrs. Rorer says: "In this age of adulteration we know not what we eat, and as canning is such a simple operation, it is unfortunate that so many people use food put up in factories."

Let the adulterators get rich (at the expense of the unwise) in hardening overripe fruit and vegetables with alum or in using deleterious antiseptics to preserve soups, catsup, vegetables and fruits till they can be worked off in slow sales at the corner grocery. You need not swallow aniline, cochineal, formaldehyde, flourine or salicylic acid if your wife or servant puts up the family canned supplies herself. Whether you raise your fruits and vegetables for canning, or buy and can them, there is no question as to purity and wholesomeness. Because a thing is salable it is not necessarily eatable. Discourage chemical preservatives by putting up the supplies in the home kitchen. Again, the garden bountiful is also the garden beautiful. I do not hold a fine flower garden much above a thrifty, well-kept vegetable garden. One may remark that vegetables do not thrive well here in the hot summer time. Neither do roses, but we do not discard them for that reason. With the advent of the great new water supply there will be no limitation to the opportunities for home vegetable and fruit gardening, and our people should begin more thoroughly to practice the art of growing fresh, sweet supplies for their own tables.

Experience With Vegetables.

THE best early bean is the Improved Golden Wax. I do not consider this of the best flavor, but it is fairly hardy and wonderfully prolific. For midseason or later I like Horticultural Dwarf cranberry. It is a very desirable bean. By two plantings to come first after the wax, then a later one the whole season may be covered. This variety is tender and highly flavored. The Homestead is my special favorite pole bean. It is truly a stringless pod bean, tender and rich in flavor. For substantial, early variety of beets Crosby's Improved Egyptian has satisfied me perfectly. I shall hold to it for a family supply until I find something better. The most that can be said against this beet is that the leaf or top growth is composed of several eyes or crowns.

For the earliest variety of sweet corn I prefer the Early Corey. With me it is so far the best, though many new kinds have been introduced, tried and discarded. I follow this with Country Gentleman, since this is my ideal of a first-class sweet corn. It is a great improvement on the old shoe-peg variety so long a favorite. Its leading feature is productiveness; each stalk produces three to five ears of medium to large size. Couple the productiveness with the sweet flavor, this variety stands without a rival.

The lover of parsnips is often disappointed by setting poor seed and sometimes of a poor variety. This was my experience until I found the Improved Table Gurnesey. It is of the Hollow Crown type. The roots do not grow as long as some other varieties and hold their size better from top to tip of the root than the ordinary Hollow Crown. They are thus easily dug. The plant is a strong grower, develops to large size, easily dug, has no hard fiber, is smooth and white, and has a delicious flavor. It gets tender almost as soon as completely heated. —[S. H. Fertilizer for Celery.

A SUBSCRIBER from Portage, Mich., asks about the best fertilizer for growing celery, the element that should prevail in it and the amount to use, also where the fertilizer can be tested and the expense of the same.

If the inquirer had stated the kind of soil it would have simplified the answer. Celery feeds largely on nitrogen and does best in a soil well stocked with vegetable matter. In other words, it revels in a black loam, or muck soil. The best fertilizer is well decayed farmyard manure strewn in the bottom of the furrow made to receive the plants and stirred in the same so as to mix it with earth by running a one-horse cultivator along the furrow with the teeth set close. Compost made of decayed sods and leaves will answer the same purpose. If commercial fertilizers are used, the ingredient most needed is nitrogen applied at the rate of say 100 pounds per acre. Fifty pounds per acre could be sown along the rows at the time of planting just after the plants have been set and the balance some weeks later.

Usually each State requires the fertilizer to be analyzed before it is put on the market, and a statement of the analysis to be furnished with the goods. In some instances, such materials may be analyzed by applying to the State chemist or to the chemist of the agricultural college. As is generally known, nitrogen may be purchased in the form of nitrate of soda, sulphate of ammonia and slag.—[Farmer.

Texas Onion Acreage.

IN and around Laredo the onion acreage this season will be slightly increased, while at Cotulla, Carrizo Springs, Eagle Pass, New Braunfels and in territory in the immediate vicinity of San Antonio the acreage may run 50 per cent. short of that of last year. I think that, all told, we will have not to exceed 1000 acres of onions for the spring market. Many of the growers suffered severe losses last year, largely a result of want of intelligently marketing their crop, faulty packing and unwise consignments.

Onion growers have organized and are attempting to perfect an arrangement, pledging each one to sell only f. o. b., preferring to allow the onions to rot in the field to taking the risk they took last year. I think that T. C. Nye has contracted in advance for his onions, but I know of no other one who has made a similar contract.—[Texas Exchange.

Growers Unite.

THE asparagus growers of Massachusetts are getting together to form an organization for fighting the asparagus diseases and otherwise promoting the interests of growers. The officers say that asparagus growers in other parts of New England will be allowed to join if they wish, as the movement is partly national in its scope. It is hoped that the Department of Agriculture at Washington will be able to bring forward a variety of asparagus that is resistant to the rust, a disease which has proved a serious drawback to the industry for many years past. The asparagus growers are among the most intelligent and progressive specialists, and are setting a good example for others who depend upon a crop in which great skill and united action are a help.

Do Not Fear Asparagus Rust.

IT was the absence of the disease known as asparagus rust, which had proven so severe a plague in the Eastern asparagus sections, which gave its first impetus to the asparagus culture in California. Some three years ago it was discovered that this disease had obtained a foothold in our principal asparagus sections, and for some time it was feared that the industry was doomed in our State, but it has been discovered that the disease can be controlled to some extent, and that while it is troublesome and somewhat expensive to check, the production of this vegetable still leaves a very respectable profit to the grower, and the danger resulting from an attack of the disease is not nearly so severe as was first feared. In consequence there have been some very extensive plantings of asparagus in the bottom lands and islands of the Sacramento and the San Joaquin rivers. In San Joaquin county at the present time work is being prosecuted in the planting of one tract of 500 acres. This will be but one of several large tracts planted to this succulent, most of which is used for canning purposes, although very large quantities are shipped fresh to the Eastern market. California has made wonderful strides in asparagus culture in the past few years and there is little doubt but that within the next few years she will lead the world in its production.—[California Cultivator.

WHAT IT IS TO BE A PAPA.

Representative Chalk Beeson of Kansas is the head of a forestry station that gives trees to farmers. In an address to a women's congress Mr. Beeson said:

"Trees are like children. In the beginning they give us a great deal of trouble and worry, but in the end we are very proud of them. Young trees are vexatious. Young children are vexatious. I know a man who sat in his study the other afternoon writing a speech, when his little son called shrilly from the garden:

" 'Papa, papa, look out of the window.'

" 'What a nuisance children are,' grumbled the man, but nevertheless he put down his pen and with a smile he advanced to the window promptly and stuck forth his head.

" 'Well, what is it?' said he.

"The boy, from a group of youngsters, called up:

" 'Jimmy Smith wouldn't believe you had no hair on the top of your head.' "—[New York Tribune.

DEADLY CHINESE PIGTAILS.

German papers forwarded by Consul-General Guenther, of Frankfort, state that the importation of Chinese pigtails, which are imported into Europe in packages of one thousand pounds each, was recently the subject of court proceedings in England. A laborer who was employed in preparing camel's hair, cheap foreign wool and human hair had been taken sick with fatal inflammation of the spleen (milzbrand.) In order to fix the cause it was ascertained that the pigtails, after being cut off the heads of Chinamen, were at once braided and packed. The possibility exists that the hair comes from the head of a Chinaman who suffered from the plague or some other contagious disease. Two previous cases of "milzbrand" have occurred among the workingmen of the English establishment. It is therefore indicated that these pigtails should be closely examined under the microscope, and the result may be to prohibit their importation.—[United States Consular Bulletin.

Medical Legislation—LII.

WITH this number, the series of articles on medical legislation, having completed the full year, as outlined by the editor in the beginning, comes to an end. Readers of the department should not, however, for a moment suppose that this important subject will henceforth be ignored in these columns. On the contrary, it will be followed up, if possible, with greater force and enthusiasm, if not at quite so great length.

This is, indeed, a subject of the most vital importance to the American people. It is of far greater importance than the question of labor tyranny, or trust monopoly—important indeed as those subjects are—because the latter deal merely with a man's worldly possessions, while the doctor trust threatens the very life of a man, and of those who are near and dear to him. Should a proposition be placed before the people of the United States to make every man worship in the churches of a certain sect, what a tremendous howl would go up. Yet, really that would not be so bad as that every man should be compelled to use the medical services of a certain school, because, in the former case, a man would only jeopardize a problematical future, whereas, in the latter case, his life is at stake—the only life that we are altogether sure of. Add to this the fact that, as shown from week to week in these columns, the school of medicine that claims a monopoly of treating disease is, according to the statements of hundreds of eminent members of that school, "founded on guesswork," "a barbarous jargon," "most uncertain," "founded on conjecture and improved by murder," "the art of conjecture and the science of guessing," "a muddle of empirically clear facts and theoretical observations," "an ineffectual speculation" and so forth, and it is difficult to see how we can escape the conclusion that the claim of this medical school to monopolize the healing art is an astonishingly gross piece of impudent presumption, that should be deeply resented by all independent, right-thinking American citizens.

Naturally, the "regulars" object to the frank and free discussion of this subject in a "lay" paper. Doubtless, the medical trust would be pleased, if the press would keep silent regarding the weaknesses and errors of medical practice. So would the commercial trusts, if the papers would consent to talk about the weather, and the situation in Russia. The people of this country are, however, not quite ready to hand over the entire control of their souls to the priests, of their worldly goods to the lawyers, and of their bodies to the doctors.

Critics of this department err seriously, when they affirm that the medical profession has been slandered, abused and ridiculed by The Times. The editor of this department challenges these critics to point to a single statement, relating to the medical profession, or medical practice, that cannot be fully substantiated—in many cases, from the writings or speeches of prominent physicians of the "regular" school. The editor has a high respect for the physician—the good physician. It is the false system that he criticizes.

Young physicians believe what they have been taught in the medical colleges, and start out with great enthusiasm for their chosen profession. As they grow older, and begin to realize the lamentable weakness of the drug system, many of them would be glad to adopt saner methods, but the bogie of "medical ethics" stands in the way. Besides, they have not been taught the laws of health—they do not even know what disease really is—so what should they do?

The editor has shown, on the authority of eminent members of the profession, that medicine is not a science, but a game of ever-changing guesswork. On the same authority, he has shown that drugs kill more than disease. Yet, notwithstanding this, the "regulars" are ever demanding proscriptive laws, to enable them to monopolize the treatment of the sick. If they had the power, they would not permit a woman to give a neighbor's child a cup of catnip tea, without the consent of an M.D. A few months ago, Eugene Christian, a worthy New Yorker, who has written a valuable book on diet, was arrested, at the instance of the New York State Medical Society, for advising people what to eat. When they found that they had, in this case, "bitten off more than they could chew," they drew in their horns. Recently, a brave old army veteran of Pasadena, who lives on his pension, was arrested and fined $100, because he would not sell to the medical fraternity the recipe for an external cancer cure, by means of which he has extracted scores of cancers in that city and Los Angeles. He charged nothing for his services, beyond what people chose to give, and in some cases did not even get his car fare. Finally, weary and disheartened by persecution, he sold out to a few doctors, who are now dispensing the cure in this city, under a company name, at a good, round price. There's a good sample of "medical ethics."

It is not many years since the allopaths treated the homeopaths—who, if they do little good, also do little harm—just as they are now treating natural healers. They were sneered at, derided and prevented from practicing. Then they became too strong, and had to be taken into the fold. Now, some of them are inclined to become as arrogant and tyrannical as the allopaths. Next were taken in the eclectics. Now the osteopaths have forced recognition, in most of the States, and the allopaths pretend to be friendly, while knifing them in the back, whenever they have a chance. These people are curing—or rather aiding nature to cure—where the allopaths fail, and many whom the allopaths have given up as hopeless. Hence these tears.

The public should have a right to choose its own physician, as it chooses its own parson, or to do without either. The only provision should be that a practitioner must show he is capable to do what he claims to do, whether in the line of osteopathy, hydropathy, massage, diet or any other system, and that should be decided by a jury of his peers—by qualified practitioners of the same school, not by allopaths, or homeopaths, who know nothing about it, and are prejudiced against it. This point was made recently by an Eastern judge, in presiding at the trial of a chiropractic. He decided that allopathic physicians could not testify, because they did not understand the system.

Undoubtedly, it would suit the "regulars" if the editor of this department would confine himself to vapid, innocuous advice as to the treatment of stomach ache, by hot cloths, with a suggestion that a "qualified physician" should be consulted regarding internal remedies, but that is not what the intelligent readers of the department expect, or are entitled to. Surely, it must be a weak and wobbly cause that cannot face the bright light of free public discussion. That, however, has always been the trouble with the medical priesthood, as it was with the religious priesthood, in the Middle Ages. To retain their hold on the masses, they must adopt an air of mystery, and "assume a virtue if they have it not." If statements published in this department are wrong, why not expose them? Or, is that perhaps contrary to "medical ethics"—an ethics that winks at abortionists, and men who lend their names to blood-sucking quacks, provided they are "regulars," while persecuting venerable members of their own school, who have forgotten more than the unlicked cubs from college will ever know, although they may be able to rattle off answers to "catch" questions, that would puzzle the examiners themselves.

At a meeting of the Los Angeles County Society, on June 30 last, Dr. Alfred Stengel, Professor of Clinical Medicine in the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, delivered an address on "Aims and Methods in Medical Diagnosis," in the course of which he said:

"On reflection one must concede that with the exception of some of the fundamental branches, particularly pathology and physiology, medicine is not so exact as might be desirable, though it is certainly erroneous to say that it is in any sense unscientific. It was asserted very positively at the recent Congress of Arts and Sciences at St. Louis that medicine as a whole should not be classified among the exact natural sciences. Though we may question the wisdom of so radical a departure from precedence as well as from our desires, it is practical wisdom for the profession to accept this situation. The claim to a place among the exact sciences has been attacked on the ground of the uncertainties of diagnosis, prognosis and therapeutics. There is little doubt that a far greater degree of exactness is desirable in these branches than has yet been manifested. It cannot, as I shall presently point out, be of advantage to us to arrogate to ourselves a position which our performances do not fully justify. Nothing could more speedily bring upon the profession criticism and even ridicule, and I am convinced that in the past the loss of respect shown among some, and not always the ignorant, among the laity, has been due to the fact that our fulfillments have not been commensurate with our promises. . . . If we were less disposed to concealment of the things that cannot be accomplished by medicinal or other treatment, if we were less often guilty of running after strange gods in the form of new fledged drugs lauded in inspired publications, and if we showed in every relation of practice a constant disposition to hold only to principles of treatment that have a sure foundation, the public as a whole would respect us more highly and would accept our word as final. . . . It must be admitted that we are delinquent to a large degree, and we cannot, therefore, be too critical if the public hesitates in accepting ours as the final word in determining the possibility of relief. When we have failed is it any wonder that the layman runs to fads and quackery? The day of systems of treatment is done, and the more intelligent of the public know it, but it rests with us to so order our attitude that even the ignorant will have full confidence though they lack in intelligence and judgment."

Did these remarks emanate from a "layman," they would probably be characterized by the medicos as "slander, abuse and ridicule." Here, it should be noted that most of the charges against the medical system of practice published in this department, showing the follies and failures of the system of drug medication, have been simply quotations from statements made by eminent members of the regular school. Surely, in view of such admissions, the allopaths should be modest, and not attempt to secure by law a monopoly of the art of healing.

Times have changed since forty years ago, when Dr. Trall, the pioneer of hygienic healing in the United States, found it difficult to secure permission to deliver his epoch-making arraignment of medical errors in the Smithsonian Institution, of Washington. The people are rapidly learning, and can no longer be kept in darkness. As Dr. J. H. Tilden, of Denver, a graduate of the allopathic school says:

"The New Thought superstition beats drug superstition a country block; the more we have of it the better until drugs are dead. Already there are drugless schools ...and their graduates are scattering all over the country, demonstrating to the people that disease can be expelled without the use of drugs. I am told that the leading school of osteopathy at Kirksville, Mo., has 600 students this winter. What does that indicate? It means a landslide out of drug superstition. If there was not a demand for drugless doctors such object lessons would not exist. There is also a falling off in attendance at the regular medical colleges all over the country.

CONTINUING from last week the discussion as to what kind of water should be drunk, let us now look at the other side of the question, namely, the claim made by many that distilled water is the only water fit to drink. As previously stated, a vast amount of artificial and spring water is consumed in Los Angeles, largely on account of the fact that the water of the Los Angeles River is hard. Following is an analysis of Los Angeles River water:

	Grains.
Silica	1.168
Oxide of iron and albuminum	.011
Carbonates of lime	4.656
Carbonates of magnesia	3.885
Sulphates of lime	7.661
Sodium and potassium sulphates	2.117
Sodium and potassium chlorides	2.424
Sodium and potassium carbonates	5.400
Grains per gallon	27.322

As compared with the water of some other cities, this water shows up as follows:

Total number of grains of solid matter per gallon.
New York City water	7
Chicago	10
Philadelphia	4
Brooklyn	6
Boston	3
Pittsburgh	7
Los Angeles City water	27

In fairness, it should be stated that the above analysis is published by a local company which manufactures distilled water, on a large scale. It appears, however, to be a conservative estimate, as a correspondent, who wrote to The Times a few months ago, said:

"The normal quantity of mineral in solution in the Los Angeles River is 32 grains to the gallon, and the best water obtained from wells owned by the city carries 20 grains. Some of the bottled so-called 'spring' water sold in Los Angeles as perfectly pure, contains 260 grains of mineral salts to the gallon, and is harder than adamant."

As to the amount of mineral matter that may be taken in water without injury, a writer on hygiene says:

"Soft water is preferable to hard water. Distilled water is best of all, when it has been properly aërated. A good spring or deep-well water, if free from contamination, is perfectly wholesome, even though a little hard. No injurious effects are likely to follow the use of water containing not more than twenty to thirty grains to the gallon of lime or magnesia salts. Very hard water is injurious."

In regard to the statement of Mr. Conable, of the Pathfinder, referred to last week, that distilled water will kill all plant life that depends wholly upon it, a correspondent wrote to Mr. Conable as follows:

"You say it will kill all plant life that depends wholly upon it. Let us see about that. About the time I purchased my still I bought from an Eastern greenhouse a rubber plant—I believe a native of New Zealand—that I was very anxious to make grow. It has been kept in the house, of course, and received its regular cup of distilled water once or twice a week ever since purchased, and it is now as fine and thrifty a plant as you will find outside the greenhouse."

The editor can personally confirm this statement. A few months ago, to test the matter, he selected two potted plants from his porch, and watered them with distilled water only for six weeks. At the end of that period they looked more thrifty than the other plants. It is, therefore, evidently untrue that distilled water is destructive to plant life. Indeed, what is rain water but distilled water, plus whatever ethereal force it may gather on its way through the atmosphere?

In reply to an inquiry from the editor, the manager of a large Los Angeles distilled water factory wrote as follows, a year ago:

"Every once in a while I happen to run across people who say that distilled water is a dead water. When I ask them what dead water is, they say it is a water without life. Then when I ask them what constitutes life in water, they ordinarily have no reply to make. When they say people should drink water provided by nature, I ask them what particular water provided by nature is the proper water for them to drink, and they say the water procured from wells, springs, etc. When I tell them that these waters vary in the quantity of mineral contained, from four to several hundred grains of mineral matter per gallon, and that these minerals vary exceedingly in character; then ask them what particular minerals and how much of them are required by the human system, they will generally get 'up a stump.'

"Mr. Conable's statement that 'there is not the slightest nutrition in distilled water, . . . that it is merely wet, etc.,' is the veriest nonsense; as is also his statement that 'distilled water will ruin the stomach and kidneys.' Such statements are absolutely silly.

"It is generally conceded that the waters from the mountain springs are the purest obtainable in nature; and every one knows that these waters contain, as a rule, a very small amount of mineral matter, and at their best are a close approach to distilled water, so far as the percentage of mineral is concerned. Of course, the waters from melted snow are contaminated, to a certain extent, by the impurities of the air; but, as a rule, they are good and palatable waters.

"Croton water, the supply of New York City, is comparatively a pure water, and as I remember contains only about five grains of mineral matter per gallon, as compared with the waters of Southern California, which contain, as a rule, from 27 to 40 grains per gallon.

"Distilled water is a dead water, if it requires mineral or organic matter to constitute a live water. It is generally conceded that ordinary live water is one that contains a considerable amount of air. Water will absorb a certain amount of air, depending upon its temperature. At a temperature of (I think) 60 degrees F. it will absorb one-fifty-sixth of its volume, under atmospheric pressure. While distilled water without being aërated is perfectly healthful and good, at the same time, it becomes more palatable if aërated with as much air as it will absorb at the temperature at which it is drunk. Our distilled water is fully aërated with all the air it will absorb at a temperature, varying from 55 degrees to 65 degrees, and this air is filtered through absorbent cotton and washed thoroughly with distilled water before it passes to our tanks.

"I think if distilled water will ruin the stomach and kidneys, the United States navy, as well as the navies of the European nations, would not use it exclusively on board their vessels, or that the War Department would not erect distilling plants at various army stations in order to provide its men with pure water. The testimony of army officers, physicians and surgeons, is unanimous as to the healthfulness of distilled water. The leading physicians in Los Angeles, as well as all Eastern cities, recommend and use distilled water. The use of pure water is growing rapidly in nearly all the cities in America."

In regard to mineral springs, as the editor has frequently observed, there is much nonsense in regard to the beneficial effects of mineral water, at popular springs, whether taken internally or externally. The results are mainly due to suggestion aided by mental and bodily rest, fresh air, moderation in diet, exercise, sometimes the drinking of water—in spite of its mineral contents—and plenty of sleep. Also, last, but not least, change of surroundings and topics of conversation. As to the minerals, mineral cannot be absorbed by the system, and consequently passes out inert. Dr. C. S. Porter of Long Beach, says, in regard to the celebrated Arkansas Hot Springs:

"The results obtained at the most successful of these resorts in this country, the Arkansas Hot Springs, are due to the great purity of the water, and not to any medicinal quality, and its systematic use in drinking and warm baths.

"These springs are controlled by the government and the published analyses show that the water contains so little salts or solid matter that it is almost equivalent to distilled or rain water.

"The good results are obtained by the quantity of fluid added to the blood and the improvement of the skin from the warm baths."

Yet we find proprietors of hot springs boasting about the large percentage of mineral found in their waters.

As already shown, in previous articles of this series, the drinking of large quantities of liquids throws an unnatural strain upon various organs of the body, and especially upon the heart. Therefore, people whose hearts are weak are likely to be more injured than benefited by a visit to a mineral spring, if they drink much of the water.

Since the discovery of radium, an interesting discussion has arisen as to whether, possibly, the medicinal qualities of certain mineral springs are not due to the presence of minute quantities of that mysterious mineral. The following, on this subject, recently appeared in an exchange:

"The medicinal hot springs in some parts of Europe and the natural hot waters owned by the United States government at Hot Springs, Ark., have always puzzled science, for, while the curative effect of the hot water was beyond doubt, no chemical analysis ever revealed anything to satisfactorily account for it. It could hardly be supposed, says the London Lancet, that a few grains per gallon of chalk, sulphate of lime, common salt and so on could have any marked beneficial influence. The waters of Bath, Buxton, Contrexeville and Hot Springs, Ark., exhibit a comparatively feeble degree of mineralization, and yet there can be no doubt of their therapeutic value. Nor can it be supposed that a water which is naturally hot can have greater therapeutic effects than would be gained by the similar use of artificially heated water. So far, then, the findings of the physicist and the chemist do not afford a satisfactory hypothesis in regard to the thereapeutic value of such waters.

"The question now arises whether the fact that these waters are radioactive will supply any explanation. Most, if not all, of the thermal springs in Europe which have been examined have been found to contain in slightly varying quantities argon and helium, and in the majority of cases these waters have been found to be distinctively radioactive. Indeed, the presence of ar-

MODERN TREATMENT OF DEAFNESS

By S. G. MARSHUTZ, Optician

When, more than fifteen months ago, we introduced the Hutchison Acousticon and Massacon, those instruments came to us with their laurels won at the St. Louis World's Fair. After a searching investigation on our part, as to their merits, we engaged to introduce these wonderful instruments here and hereabout, and bring them to the attention of those afflicted with their hearing.

Their success has been wonderful from the start. We gladly furnish interested parties with the addresses of those clients who were benefited and permit us to tell it. We consider the use of either Massacon or Acousticon by a client a matter of confidential nature. Some clients permit us to use their names as references; others prefer to wait; possibly so as to be able to surprise their friends when they are better.

The following striking letter was received by us recently from a happy, well-satisfied gentleman of Long Beach, who bought a Massacon of us in March, 1905. This letter speaks of the Massacon and its great value to the deaf. This instrument is designed for home treatment (three minutes three times daily, that's all.)

Long Beach, Calif., Dec. 19, 1905.

Marshutz Optical Co., Los Angeles:

Gentlemen—I bought of you a Hutchison Massacon in March, 1905, and after using it for eight or nine months, must say that I am very much pleased with the result, inasmuch as it has restored my hearing, and I can hear all conversations and talk of people in their ordinary tone of voice.

I feel I am entirely cured, and gladly inform you of the great benefit this instrument has been to me, with the permission to publish this voluntary testimony of you so desire.

Yours very truly,
ED. V. HALL,
754 Locust Ave., Long Beach.

The above instruments are for sale at MARSHUTZ OPTICAL CO., 133 So. Spring, who are the general agents for Southern California of the Hutchison Acoustic Co. Interested out-of-town parties will please write for free catalogue. Demonstrations of the instruments will be cheerfully given free of charge.

gon and helium would appear to be inseparable from radioactive properties. We seem here to be getting some light at length on what has long been an enigma, that of two waters showing the same chemical composition as regards their saline constituents; the one of natural origin is distinctly superior, therapeutically speaking, to the one artificially compounded.

"The fact is that a natural water welling up from the earth is at the moment of its discharge from its source radioactive, while ordinary drinking water, rain water, well water and the like do not generally exhibit this property to any extent. Further, since the property of radioactivity is rapidly evanescent, the emanation quickly vanishing, it follows that if the benefit derived from undergoing a course of waters is due to the radioactivity of those waters, the treatment should obviously take place near the source of the water—in other words, the waters should be used when they are showing a maximum degree of radioactivity."

Is it not, also, possible that the tonic effects of sea water may be partly due to the same cause?

Finally, those who depend upon well water would do well to read the following, from the Medical Era:

"Water supply, especially in the rural districts, is so closely related to typhoid fever that too much care cannot be exercised in the selection of a well. Dr. F. F. Casseday says whether well water is pure or polluted depends upon local conditions quite independent of the depth of the well. Wells usually receive their supply of water from what is termed ground water, and not from underground rivers or streams. This sheet of ground water approaches the surface closely in some places and dips deeply in others. Ground water also rises and falls to a certain extent in rainy and dry seasons."

Marriage Relations.

"THE Abuse of the Marriage Relations; Explaining the Origin of Most Chronic Diseases, Especially Chronic Diseases of Women," is a 32-page booklet, being a reproduction of an article published in the Kneipp Water Cure Monthly, for January, March and April, 1901. It is a plain-spoken article on a most important subject. The author, Dr. E. Rosch, takes the view that a great majority of people would regard as exceedingly radical, and perhaps impracticable. In the introduction the publisher says: "Ninety per cent. of woman's woes and a large percentage of childhood disorders as rickets, spasms, peevishness, hyperkinesis and digestive nervous complications are directly traceable to perversive coition."

The author claims that the misuse of sexual intercourse after conception, and during the period of suckling, is unnatural, and the cause of many ailments. He points to the example of the animals, as a proof of this. It is true that there are here a few exceptions, but not many. This, also, he claims, is the reason why pregnancy is usually accompanied in the first stages by nausea and vomiting. He points to the fact that frequently two people are united in wedlock who have known each other for years and have always been most harmonious, but after a short six months they begin to quarrel so violently that eventually they appear in the divorce court. This, he declares, is also the reason that marriages contracted from convenience are happier by far than those so-called "love marriages." This "coarse and brutal" statement will certainly arouse a storm of protest from sentimental people.

Another result of these conditions often is that menstruation sets in again too soon after childbirth, greatly to the injury of both mother and child.

Referring to those who boast of possessing phenomenal sexual powers the author says:

"If sexual intercourse is continuously indulged in, then nature herself is compelled to direct more power in one direction, the individual in question thinks he must be gifted with extraordinary sexual powers, and in his hypochondriac illusion he does not notice that this is effected only to the detriment of all other remaining vital functions.

"On that account, hypochondriacs and consumptives are often the most immoderate in this kind of enjoyment, and experience teaches also that on the contrary the demands of nature, in regards to the creative organs, become much rarer in perfectly healthy men, if they observe the proper diet and abstemiousness."

The author fails to state that such a course as he indicates is practically impossible, so long as men continue to eat far more than is necessary, and to use stimulating foods and drinks. He should also have called attention to the desirability, for more reasons than one, of married people sleeping in separate beds.

Not a Medical Graduate.

THE editor of the "Care of the Body" department is frequently asked whether he is a graduate of a medical college, to which question he answers no, and adds that he is glad he is not, considering that, in such colleges, the students devote about four hours of a four years' course to the study of health, and the rest of the time to the absorption of erroneous ideas as to the nature of disease, so that, if he had gone through such a mill, he would have had to put in half a lifetime unlearning what he had been taught. He has, however, for over forty years been a close and industrious student of hygiene, of the cause of disease, and especially of diet, and has spent months in the leading nature cure institutions of Germany, where the natural cure of disease had its modern evolution. Without boasting, he believes he may lay claim to a more thorough knowledge of food values than a great majority of the "regular" physicians, and is willing at any time to meet them in debate on the subject.

THIS is from Life: "Papa, can you fix Dolly? I operated on her, and all her utensils are coming out."

A Bloody Saturnalia.

THE recent article on the slaughter-houses of Chicago, and the subtle suggestive influence exercised by the wholesale slaughter of living beings upon a community, has received warm indorsement from various sources, including some where the editor would scarcely have expected to arouse such sentiments. It is surely a question of no mean importance, and undoubtedly adds weight to the arguments of those who oppose the use of flesh foods merely from a hygienic point of view. In his latest book, "The Miracle of Life," Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, referring to the slaughter yards of Chicago, says:

"Confused, dazed by their new surroundings, frightened by the drover's whip, possibly imagining that they are being parceled off to be fed, they meekly stand, waiting they know not what. Presently a ruffian, unseen, unsuspected, slips up behind, and deals each poor brute a sledgehammer blow between the eyes, which fells him to the floor, not dead, but insensible.

"One of the big doors shown in the picture now rises, and the innocent victims are rolled out upon the floor. At this point they are seized, swung aloft, flayed, eviscerated, drawn, quartered, and hung up to 'ripen,' by processes of putrefaction, until they become 'Christmas beef,' possessing just the right odor and flavor of putrescence to suit the appetite of the epicure, tender morsels to be torn into shreds by dainty teeth, that are carefully cleansed and polished three times a day, only to be as many times plunged anew into the decaying carcass of some dead beast.

"Consider a moment, reader, how much blood is poured out in this slaughter. A calculation based upon very moderate figures shows that the amount of blood annually shed in the Chicago abattoirs alone is more than sufficient to float five great ocean steamships. What crime have these poor brutes committed, that they should thus be executed? What law of God or man have they violated, that they should thus prematurely die, that their blood should be poured out upon the soil as a fertilizer? Verily, the blood of multimillions of innocents cries from the ground.

"The influence of the abattoir, of the common slaughter-house, is equally shown in the moral deterioration evident in the men whose lives are devoted to the slaughtering of innocent beasts. The ears of such men become deaf to the agonizing cry of the intelligent brute that suspects its fate. The spectacle of a living being pouring out its life blood in a gushing stream, loses its ghastliness; the sight of quivering flesh, of writhing entrails, loses its gruesomeness; life, that divine spark of infinite energy which animates all living things and makes all sentient creatures kin—this wonderful, mysterious, God-given life—loses its sacredness. The hired assassin is almost always a butcher. The perpetrators of many of the most atrocious and cold-blooded crimes have been more frequently butchers than men of any other occupation. That a man is by trade a murderer of brutes—a butcher—is almost universally, in Christendom, regarded as a disqualification for service upon a jury, in which the question of responsibility for human life is involved."

Fruit and Nuts—Olives.

M. P. J. of Pasadena writes:

"Two or three Sundays ago you published an article for a man engaged in clerical work, and gave how to arrange his diet on fruit and nuts. Would you please give a similar one for a young man engaged in active outdoor garden work.

"Does it hurt olives to be cured in lye, and is there any on market that has been cured by not using it?

"What about using cheese, milk and eggs with fruit and nuts?"

The same, only more of it. Certain heavy foods, that are slow of digestion—such as pork and beans, for instance—are specially to be avoided by the sedentary, but fruit and nuts, being a perfect dietary, may be eaten by all, if—and this is highly important—they are thoroughly masticated. If your teeth are defective, get a nut mill.

Milk should not be taken with other food except, perhaps, a little thoroughly dextrinized grain foods, or dried fruit. If cheese is eaten, only the fresh cream cheese should be used, as cheese soon begins to decay, producing substances that are highly irritating to the stomach, and having sometimes more serious consequences. You should not use cheese or eggs with nuts. That is like putting sugar on chocolate, or salt on salted codfish. When used with fruit or salads, they may occasionally take the place of nuts. Eggs are best raw and thoroughly beaten up. They may be flavored with a little tomato or lemon juice, or may be poured over a salad, as a mayonnaise. Eat something hard with it, so as to insure mastication.

Mouth Breathing.

M. S. J. writes:

"Is there any way of curing mouth breathing while asleep, in an adult, after it has become a habit, when it is natural to breath through the nose when awake, and when the person is in no way affected with catarrh, and perfectly well in every respect?"

The editor has heard of several suggestions for a remedy of this trouble, but, so far as he is aware, none of them have proved effective. An examination should be made, to see if there is any defect in the nasal passages. There is a mechanical contrivance advertised, to hold the mouth shut at night.

EL ESPIRITU DE UN POETA—CUENTO CAPRICHOSO.

Por Especial Contribuyente.

QUE no es cierto? Pues beban y sabran lo que Paco presencio asi como lo que le refirio el mismo espiritu del poeta.

Si, bebamos que la vida vuela . . . vuela. . . Tienes razon, bebamos que talvez mañana ya estamos haciendo compania al espiritu del coplero.

Los que rodeaban la mesa empinaron el codo hasta dejar las copas secas, y el que iba a relatar, no un cuento, sino un hecho, se acomodo las gafas negras y principio de esta manera, despues de dirigir a sus contertulios su mirada inyecta:

Hace como veinte años, en una noche preciosisima de [illegible], se daba un baile en casa de Herlinda H., en su sencilla pero bonita residencia. Encontrabase alli lo mas selecto de la clase media, gozando al vaiven suave y ondulante de los waltzes, schottishes, etc., etc.

Paco habia acabado de bailar una pieza con Herlinda, y salio al corredor huyendo del calor sofocante que habia en la sala, porque aunque la noche estaba fria, quien no se acaloriza bailando con una pareja como Herlinda? "Y que encantadora esta!" decia Paco. "Y que atrayente su cuerpo agil, gracioso, y lleno de voluptuosidad!"

No bien habia salido de la sala cuando vio venir hacia el al poeta Pierrot. La turbacion de su rostro le [illegible] que algo verdaderamente grave le sucedia.

Pierrot llego junto a el, permanecio mudo por un momento y, luego, con palabras impregnadas de una melancolia profunda le dijo: Paco, todo esta roto. He perdido todo lo que constituia mi felicidad y al mismo tiempo mi desgracia. Mis dulces esperanzas las veo marchitas y una tempestad azotadora se destaca en mi horizonte. Creeme, Paco, el que entro a esta casa trayendo en la mente las ilusiones a millares saldra de ella despechado, é ira a mezclarse entre el sordido bullicio de la crapula; o quiza dentro de una hora, el corazon que violentamente se agita en busca de amor o de venganza habra terminado su existencia destrozado por una bala!

Apoyo su flaca y temblorosa mano sobre el hombro de Paco, y al verse traicionado, de su alma apasionada se desprendio un gemido.

"Pero, dime, Pierrot, porque te expresas de semejante manera? Cual es la causa de tus desdichas?" interrogo Paco.

"Escuchame, y lo sabras todo; escuchame, antes que se me reviente el alma," respondio Pierrot.

"Herlinda, infame Herlinda, es mi amante, digo, lo fue."

"Como!" exclamo Paco.

"No te escandalizes mas oyeme: la he sorprendido en ameno coloquio con otro hombre. Le he reprochado su infidelidad, y me ha dicho que nuestras relaciones son cosa del pasado."

"Desde que llegue a la casa se habia mostrado muy fria e indiferente. Al principio lo atribui a la volubilidad de su caracter, pero ahora, ya ves, he descubierto la real causa.

"El es poseedor de una fortuna inmensa y pueda dar a Herlinda lo que ella quiera, y yo, lo unico que puedo ofrecerle es mi amor y mis caricias."

"Pero las mujeres no viven con caricias o aire, como los camaleones." interrumpio uno.

Todos soltaron una carcajada, bebieron y callaron.

El de las gafas continue: "El infeliz poeta no dijo una palabra mas, ni permitio a Paco hacerle ver que todo era hijo de su veleidosa imaginacion. Se fué.

Como Paco no dio credito a las palabras del poeta, no se ocupo mas de el durante el resto de la noche.

A la mañana siguiente los papeleros vociferaban el suicidio del infortunado Pierrot.

Al ser registradas sus ropas por el comisario de policia, se encontro en el bolsillo del chaleco una carta, [illegible] parte por la bala suicida, y de la cual solo podia [illegible] lo siguiente:

"Herlinda; nada hay mas dulce para mi, hoy que cuento la vida por segundos, que decirte una vez mas que te amo, aunque sé que no eres digna de las lagrimas que se desprenden de mis ojos——"

"Supongo que ese poeta debe haber sido hijo de [illegible]," volvio a interrumpir el mismo.

"Calla, imprudente que ya es tiempo de que nos echen a la calle," grito otro.

Seis años mas tarde, precisamente la fecha en que el poeta se habia dado muerte, Paco, llego a casa muy tarde y con mas vino en la cabeza que de costumbre. Aquel dia el recuerdo del poeta le habia perturbado tenazmente. De repente, las puertas rechinaron, y un escalofrio le corrio por el cuerpo estremeciendo sus [illegible].

"No temas," dijo una voz. "Soy el espiritu de Pierrot. Vengo a revelarte mis penas. Aquella noche cegado por los celos crei que el suicidio seria el lenitivo . . . el resto tu lo sabes. Bien, los espiritus infernales que vagan por el espacio, acechando las debilidades de los humanos, se apoderaron de mi alma y despues de atravesar el infinito en vertiginoso vuelo la arrojaron al infierno.

"No porque ese era el lugar que me correspondia por haberme suicidado, porque los que tal hacen no van alli, sino por una equivocacion, segun oi decir a los mismos demonios, y, como descubrieron por mi mal peinada y larga cabellera, y mis harpos, que yo era un poeta, su Majestad Satanica dispuso que no se me dejara salir, pues sabe que todos los poetas que han ido a visitar los [illegible] donde reina su Excelencia, desde el Dante para abajo, vuelven a la tierra y despepitan todo lo que ven, lo cual su Majestad juzga un mal y peligroso ejemplo.

"En consecuencia, tal vez yo tenga que permanecer alli por siempre."

"Y como has podido salir de esas regiones detestables para venir a visitarme?" le interrogo Paco, apretando mas los parpados, pues desde que se presento el espiritu los habia cerrado.

"Porque Satanas sabiendo que estoy alli por una mala inteligencia, se condolio de mi, y me concedio quince minutos para que visite este mundo del que todos reniegan, sin saber que un segundo de aquel castigo es mas cruel que muchos años de misera existencia aqui sobre la tierra."

"Infinidad de seres entran alli dia a dia, sobre los cuales su Majestad infernal pronuncia con voz que espantaria a las fieras una sentencia inexorable.

"Y alli mismo rodeado de gente que sufre lo indecible, he pensado muchas veces en Herlinda, y su memoria ha parecido aliviar mis dolores."

Asi hablaba el espiritu, cuando el reloj sono las tres de la mañana.

"Adios, Paco," dijo tristemente, "ha llegado el termino de mi visita."

"Pero, oye Pierrot, dime que——".

"No puedo, es imposible, adios, adios."

Una luz brillantisima ilumino el cuarto, rechinaron las puertas por segunda vez, se derrumbo el cuarto y Paco pudo ver las estrellas.

"Todo eso sucedio al irse el espiritu?" pregunto uno de los oyentes.

"No," contesto el de las gafas negras, "al chocar su cabeza contra el piso de madera."

Ja! ja! ja! ja!

I. DE LA PENA.

WOMEN WHO LIVED AS MEN.

SOME WHO PERSONATED MALES FOR YEARS WITHOUT BEING DETECTED.

[Tit-Bits:] The career of "J. Gillson," the woman killed on the railway line at Stockton when struggling to escape from a policeman, is so full of daring adventure that it deserves to rank with those of the most notorious male impersonators of the past.

"We find that Murray Hall came to her death by natural causes. He was a lady," was the jury's verdict at the inquest on the body of the well-known Tammany politician whose real name was Mary Anderson, a native of Govan, near Glasgow. Murray Hall, who was of athletic frame, was married twice, and left as sole heir an adopted daughter, aged 22. A prominent politician for over thirty years, he was a great favorite with the fair sex, and is described as having been an "all-around sport."

Dr. James Barry, who lies buried in Kensal Green Cemetery, was an equally wonderful instance of successful concealment of sex. At an early age she fell in love with an army surgeon, to follow whose fortunes she assumed the dress of the opposite sex and entered the army as hospital assistant. She displayed such ability that she rose until she was given the post of inspector-general of the army medical department.

Slight of form and of dark complexion her general bearing and conversation displayed an almost feminine refinement. A favorite with the men on account of her humanity, her quarrelsome temper by no means endeared her to the officers, and served her in such bad stead that once she was obliged to fight a duel, from which adventure she fortunately emerged scathless. She died in 1865, at the age of 70.

A female soldier who, in 1739, was buried at Chelsea Hospital with military honors, was Christian Davies, better known as Mother Ross. She served for twelve years in the Earl of Orkney's regiment, being present at the battle of Donawert, where she received a musket ball in her hip, and at the engagement of Ramillies, where she was so badly wounded as to require the attendance of a surgeon, by whom her sex was discovered. Some time after this she returned home and received from the Queen a bounty of £50 and a pension for life.

To avoid a distasteful marriage Sophie Sabine Apitzsch, who was born at Lunzenau, in Saxony, in 1692, took to wearing man's clothes. After several exciting adventures she came across an armourer, one Karl Marlitz, whose name, having by some means got possession of his papers, she for a while assumed. One day, however, on being detected blowing the horn—a privilege reserved in those days for such only as were of noble birth—she was brought before a magistrate, a certain Herr Volkman, who, for some reason known only to himself, thought he recognized in the handsome stranger the Crown Prince of Saxony. Shrewd enough to take advantage of this mistake, Sophie Apitzsch accepted not only an invitation to the magistrate's house, but all the costly presents that were showered upon her by that misguided man.

For some considerable while all went well both with Sophie and her deluded host, in whose brain the most ambitious designs for his daughter Joanna were fast taking shape. But such a gross fraud was bound sooner or later to be found out. And found out it was; when Sophie Apitzsch, brought before the authorities to answer for her fraud, could make but a lame excuse, and was sentenced to be whipped publicly out of the country—in other words, to be conveyed from town to town, until the frontier was reached, and flogged publicly in the market place of each. This severe punishment, however, was commuted to a year's imprisonment, whence Sophie emerged to disappear into obscurity, for on her subsequent career history is silent.

A Cincinnati woman who is noted for her amiability says she acquired the habit of cheerfulness by saying the following to herself every time she felt inclined to worry:

"The cow's in the hammock,
The cat's in the lake,
The children are in the garbage can.
What difference does it make?"
—[The Pneus.

PLANETARY VITALITY.

THE EARTHQUAKE OCCURS ONLY IN LIVING, NEVER IN EFFETE GLOBES.

A moonquake is now unthinkable because the moon is as dead as a door nail. Our satellite is "ever foreshadowing our own ultimate doom, like the mummy at Egyptian banquets," but in the meantime, if the Edinburgh Review has correctly conceived the teachings of the new seismology, to which it devotes a recent and impressive article, the inhabitants of earth may console themselves for the havoc wrought through earthquakes by reflecting that they demonstrate the vitality of our planet. In that distant past when the moon actually quaked there may —some scientists declare there must have been forms of animation upon its surface. "Though the moon, by reason of its smaller size, was bound to lose its atmosphere, it must have taken millions of years to do so, and there may have been time for the cycle of life, from the primeval germ up to sentient beings and down again to the hardiest lingering plant cells, to run its full circle." The writer in the Edinburgh Review continues to develop his line of thought:

"Earthquakes are a sign of planetary vitality. They would seem to be characteristic of the terrestrial phase of development. Effete globes like the moon can scarcely be subject to the stresses to which they are due; nor can they be very suitably constituted for the propagation of elastic waves. Inchoate worlds such as Jupiter and Saturn are still less likely to be the scenes of reverberating concussions. Their materials have not yet acquired the necessary cohesion. They are pasty or fluid, if not partially vaporous. On the earth the seismic epoch presumably opened when, exterior solidification having commenced, the geological ages began to run. It will last so long as peaks crumble and rivers carry sediment, so long as the areal distribution of loads fluctuates and strains evoke forces adequate for their catastrophic relief. Our globe is, by its elasticity, kept habitable. The separation of sea from dry land is thus and no otherwise maintained; the alterations of elevation and substance manifest the continual activity of this reserve of energy. The dimensions of the globe we inhabit depend upon the balance of pressure and expansiveness. Relaxation or enhancement of either instantly occasions a bending inward or an arching outward of the crust. Just by these sensitive reactions the planet shows itself to be alive, and seismic thrillings are the breaths it draws."

KENSAL GREEN.

With what sorrow, with what sadness,
Laid we one whose heart was gladness
Underneath the gentle sod.
Silver mist and birches true
Wept for him their tears of dew,
Wept for him their tears of dew.

Slowly, sadly we departed;
One was dead, one broken-hearted,
In this graveyard old.
Silver mist and birches true
Wept for both their tears of dew,
Wept for both their tears of dew.
—[A. W. Drake, in Century.

TO MY MOTHER.

Deal gently with her, Time: these many years
Of life have brought more smiles with them than tears.
Lay not thy hand too harshly on her now,
But trace decline so slowly on her brow
That (like a sunset of the northern clime,
Where twilight lingers in the summer time,
And fades at last into the silent night,
Ere one may note the passing of the light)
So may she pass—since 'tis the common lot—
As one who, resting, sleeps and knows it not.
—[John Allan Wyeth, in Century.
